STRIKE SITUATION GROWING SERIOUS IN FALL RIVER.

Power of Weavers' Union Has Been Shown and If the Mill Men Get Ugly They Will Shut Down the Mills.

It is very evident that times are growing serious in Fall River for the weavers are still joining the strikers and some mill men said last night that they would not now give way to the strikers under any consideration, until they return to work, for the reason that they fear a continuation of present methods if they prove successful in this instance.

There are other manufacturers who, after seeing the power of the weavers, now contend that a great mistake was made in treating with the spinners on one basis and with the weavers on another and much lower one. These men believe that the only way out of the present muddle is to rectify the mistake as early as possible and preserve the old good feeling between employers and employes.

A SAD CASE

Thomas Briggs belongs in Stoneham but said he was working in Billerica and partook of some cider and got drunk. He told the court about a dozen times that if he was released he would sign the pledge. Briggs wanted to get out badly. He told Judge Hadley that "he wished to God he would release him, as he wanted to see his mother." The judge told him "he was a good talker but not a good worker." He was given 24 hours to leave the city.

Jennie McDermott was sent to jail for five months for drunkenness.

When Fred A. Weaver pleaded guilty to a charge of drunkenness, Judge Hadley remarked that "this was one of the hardest cases he had to deal with inasmuch as he is intimately acquainted with the young man's family, and has known the young man himself ever since childhood. His parents have given him every opportunity to do right, and he has enjoyed many advantages. But he has been ungrateful He is a skilled workman and would make a good citizen only for drink." He told Officer Tuttle to talk with Weaver, and ascertain if he has the moral strength to stop drinking.

CURRENT POLITICAL GOSSIP.

HOW FOSS TRIES TO WORK FRENCH VOTERS.

The License Promises Will Never Be Fulfilled—A Prominent French Citizen Leaves Republican Party on Account of the A. P. A. Contingent.

Below is a communication from a French voter, a man of intelligence who has been a republican and abandons that party because of its alliance with the A. P. A. This is an example worthy of imitation by other French voters who, by supporting republicans may without knowing it be electing men endorsed by the A. P. A. and pledged to ostracise and disfranchise Catholics. It is unAmerican, undemocratic to raise a religious issue in politics or to discriminate against any man on account of his religion. Catholics do not do that because Archbishop Ireland, one of the greatest Catholic leaders of the country, advises them never to refuse to vote for a good candidate, because he happens to be a Protestant. But the religious issue has been forced upon Catholics by a lot of bigots and they must defend themselves by refusing to vote for their avowed and fanatical enemies.

To elevate the A. P. A. is to pave the way for the overthrow of constitutional liberty, to extinguish religious freedom and set up a religious or rather an irreligious test as a passport to official preferment. The subjoined letter from a prominent French citizen will be found of interest:

LOWELL, MASS., Oct. 25th, 1894.

Editor DAILY SUN:

Dear Sir—Will you be so kind as to allow me space in your paper to express my sentiments in regard to the French people and the A. P. A. Now, Mr. Editor, in one of your editorials in one of last week's papers you as much as said that the French people were in line with the A. P. A. on account of the Fremont meeting in Boston having a look of that kind. But I assure you, and the democrats of this city and elsewhere, that they have more to gain than lose by the A. P. A. antics. Now, I am a Frenchman and was always a republican, but having been a reader of your paper for the last two years I have read enough to satisfy me. I am a Catholic and I would not now vote a republican ticket for fear of voting for a man who is against my creed and put up by the A. P. A. So you see the good republicans are to blame for siding with the A. P. A. I know there is a good many French voters in the city who would express themselves in the same strain had they the courage to do so, but I have defended the French people in all caucuses. I have done so in this A. P. A. business to the best of my ability, and no French voter should support the party that has the A. P. A. in its ranks. Ask my friend Mr. Rourke of Ward one if I haven't been a republican, but am so no more. I remain yours truly,

ROCHAMBEAU.

Wm. F. Lyons of Kitson's machine shop is a candidate for the common council from Ward One.

Cornelius A. Daly, the Ward One druggist, is a candidate for the school committee in Ward One. He is a man of education and experience.

Thomas F. Garvey of the Cigarmakers' union who fought for Sen. Brady at the Central Labor union, Sunday, is a prominent candidate for the common council in Ward One. He has a large following and excellent chances of success.

It is reported that a couple of French republican ex-councilmen have been engaged working among the French voters in the interest of Foss. They have been promising liquor licenses through Mr. Foss's influence with the commission but as the commission allows nobody to promise anything on their account these gentlemen have been working a game of bluff. It is well that the voters, liquor dealers and others, should understand that all who make such promises are doing so without any authority and purely as a game of bluff. It is not likely that any French citizen will be deluded by such empty and delusive promises into supporting an A. P. A. candidate.

The populists had a rally in Jackson hall last evening. The audience was a small one and consisted partly of ladies.

The Morning Times has the following: "A republican member of the license commission rather puts a spoke in the wheel of the Foss managers when he says that no license promised in behalf of Foss to aid his campaign will, under any circumstances, be granted. That statement is likely to cause a cold chill in the 'back shop' phalanx."

Among the councilmanic candidates for the republican nomination in Alderman Lovejoy's ward is Burton A. Wiggin, a prominent young man and foreman for his father, Wm. H. Wiggin. The number of candidates cropping up in this ward promises a lively caucus.

Councilman O'Day is a candidate for renomination in Ward Six and he wants the voters to know how strongly he will favor their interests in the common council.

The French democrats organized on Sunday at the Clarendon hotel, the purpose being to promote registration and to work for the success of the democratic ticket. The French democrats are influenced as much by the A. P. A. movement as by any other cause in opposing candidates who sympathize with this proscriptive order.

Congressman O'Neill is to stump New York for David B. Hill. He is an able and convincing speaker.

Hon. George Fred Williams got a splendid reception in Lawrence last night. The democrats of Lowell would like to hear him. They were delighted with his pointed arguments and brilliant address last year.

The Lawrence Tribune says:

"Lawrence people will take peculiar pleasure in welcoming John E. Russell on the night of Nov 2, when he will speak at the Opera house. Lawrence was one of the seven Massachusetts cities that endorsed his principles by giving him a plurality last year. His lead over Greenhalge a year ago was 384. Lawrence ought to do a great deal better than that this year."

Good for Lawrence she stands unmoved in the face of every political storm, as firm in her democracy as the rock of Gibraltar. Would that Lowell followed her example.

Elihu B. Hayes, Hon. William E. Barrett and Henry Cabot Lodge all on one platform. The lamb lies down inside the lion.

ONE YEAR AT HARD LABOR.

FOR MANSLAUGHTER WILLIARD REID IS SENTENCED.

He Took the Sentence Calmly and the Light Sentence Created Considerable Surprise.

Willard T. Reed of Graniteville, who pleaded guilty to manslaughter, was sentenced to one year in the house of correction at hard labor.

When Superior court came in this morning much delay was caused by the absence of counsel of prisoners. Judge Fessenden said that hereafter cases which are delayed by counsel would be transferred to the Cambridge list for trial.

EDUCATIONAL ADVANTAGES

Emphasized by a Prominent Speaker at the Y. M. C. A.

The educational course at the Y. M. C. A., opened last night, with an address by Dr. Wm. Mowry of Hyde Park, supplemented by a short address by Supt. Whitcomb.

The attendance was large and the emphatic talk on the educational advantages offered young men by evening schools and special courses under auspices of organizations, was greatly appreciated.

Big Wrestling Match.

Harry Watson and R. M. Yarnold called at THE SUN office last evening and stated that they had signed an agreement to wrestle at collar and elbow, best two falls in three, on some date to be mutually agreed upon, but not later than November 17.

The match is for $200 a side and Watson has the privilege of naming the hall in which it will take place.

Yarnold agrees to throw Watson twice in twenty minutes or forfeit the stakes.

The men met nine years ago before the Fairfield club in Vermont, and the match was declared a draw after the men had wrestled one hour and each had secured one fall. The purse was divided.

Watson had his leg injured six weeks ago but has fully recovered.

Firemen to Practice Bowling.

Soon the sound of falling pins will be heard in the subterranean parts of the Palmer street engine house, for in the basement two bowling alleys are being built. This is a good move and the first step towards a "gym" for the department. The work is being done by the permanent firemen in the house after getting permission to put them in and to make over the basement. The firemen also settle expense so that useless space in the cellar is being finely utilized at no expense to the city and to the equal benefit of the firemen and the city property. Ed. Morse and Henry Farrell are keeping an eye on the work. The alleys will be of regulation size and finely equipped.

A Historic Lot of Dirt.

E. P. Woods took into the water board office yesterday a glass bottle containing a small portion of the first shovelfull of earth dug on the ground where the old reservoir is located by Mayor J. P. Folsom in 1870, and William Kittredge wheeled the first barrowful of earth.

Lizzie Borden's Pastor.

Rev. Mr. Judd who preached at the Kirk street church last Sunday, is Miss Borden's pastor, in Fall River. He preached a fine sermon and was cordially received by the Kirk street people.

Mr. John St. Martin of Knowlton, Conn., is visiting her son, Mr. Henry St. Martin of Nichols street.

This line of Boys' Waists is recognized as the best, and justly so. THEY GRANTED TWO PETITIONS

ALDERMEN QUICKLY SETTLE THE STREET RAILWAY QUESTION.

Restrictions Given Out With the Permits Which Will Make Both Companies Contribute to the City's Welfare.

After two lengthy hearings and several hours deliberation the mayor and aldermen last evening voted unanimously to grant to the Lowell, Lawrence and Haverhill, and the Lowell & Suburban Street Railway companies, the locations asked by them on First street. And all this, in spite of the remonstrance of 300 citizens represented by Fred'k Lawton, Esq., and the noble fight for his rights single handed by Major Rowell, a member of the syndicate of which Alderman Lovejoy is a member, and which owns 70 acres of land on the line of one proposed route. The opposition of the Locks and Canals company did not amount to much.

President Campbell of the Lowell, Lawrence & Haverhill company, witnessed the triumph of his company's efforts to gain admittance to this city and Percy Parker, treasurer of the local company seemed pleased when he saw eight aldermen vote in favor of his petition.

Squire Qua seemed placid when the decision of the board was announced, and young Lawyer Richardson hustled home to convey the news to his learned and respected "pa." Yesterday's meeting of the aldermen was one that adjourned over from last Thursday evening. It was called for 4 o'clock and the members were on time. So were representatives of the interested parties.

The mayor summoned the aldermen to his reception room. Col. Francis and the engineer of the Locks and Canals company were consulted, and the aldermen also heard President Campbell and Counsel Qua of the Lowell, Lawrence & Haverhill company.

The executive session lasted till 5.45, when the meeting resumed.

It was evident that some decision had been reached. Mayor Pickman called to order and looked at Alderman Westall who returned the glance. Then his honor gazed inquiringly at Alderman Lovejoy who wants to be mayor. The alderman from the fifth smiled at Westall and then said: "Mr. Mayor, I understand that there are some legal papers to be drawn up so

"Never mind stating that" replied the mayor, and the motion passed.

At 6 o'clock the board again went into executive session in the mayor's reception room, presumably to prepare a resolution and agree upon conditions to go with the resolution granting the company's petition.

It was 7.25 when they again went into open meeting.

After Mayor Pickman called to order the following petitions were referred: of Capt. L. C. Prouty for a landing place for boats on the upper Merrimack river; of James Flaherty, for a street light on L street; of John Ryan for an electric light at the corner of Westford and Pine streets; of C. I. Hood, protesting against the location of a pole at the corner of Eliot and Middlesex streets.

Notice was received from the county commissioners that a hearing will be held next month on the petition to widen Gorham street.

A resolution introduced by Alderman Stanley was then passed unanimously granting a location of tracks on First street to the L. L. & H. Railway Co., as petitioned for by them.

A resolution was also passed granting a location of tracks on First street to the Lowell & Suburban company as petitioned for.

The Lowell and Suburban company was also granted the right to lay a single track on Rogers street to the Tewksbury line. Their petition to relocate tracks from East Merrimack and Hoyt street to the junction of Nesmith and Wyman streets was refused.

An order was adopted approving the location granted the L. L. & H. company over private land in the city.

The agreement signed by the companies in return for the locations granted them, provides that all poles shall be of a height and color acceptable to the mayor and aldermen; gives the firemen in case of fire permission to cut wires or order a current discontinued, the same to be repaired at the expense of the companies; binds them to pave between the tracks and 18 inches on each side of them and to keep the road on First street, in which the tracks are laid free from snow and ice, in the winter time.

The agreement with the L. L. & H. company further provides that the company shall build a way 50 feet wide along their route and make the same fit for travel. They shall not oppose laying it out as a public way, and also agree to pay all damages arising from such laying out.

Shortly after 8 o'clock the board adjourned to the Merrimack house, and dined. After that the members attended the performance of "Faust" at the Opera house.

EVENING SCHOOLS ARE OPEN.

ATTENDANCE FALLS FAR BELOW POINT REACHED LAST YEAR.

In the High School the Average Age of Pupils is Higher Than Before While at all Schools the Prospects are good for Greater Interest on the Part of Those Attending.

The free evening schools of the city opened last evening for the winter term. The opening was not so encouraging or auspicious, in point of attendance of pupils, as last year. Every evening last week, the schools were opened for registration of pupils, and the reports from the different schools are not so gratifying as might be expected.

Registration for the different schools was as follows:

High, 743; Green, 350; Bartlett, 201; Aiken Avenue, 102; Mann and Worthen Street, 184; High Street, 20; Butler, 85; Franklin, 164; Edson, 103; Varnum, 105; Colburn, 132; total, 2,192. Supervisor Smith says that the total registration is about 500 below last year's attendance, and unless there is a marked increase during the week some of the rooms will be closed, and a number of teachers dropped.

At the schools about all who were registered reported and received their first instruction of the term. In the Worthen street school there are about 80 Portuguese and Armenian pupils endeavoring to master the English language.

At the Green school the register contained about 150 names less than there were pupils in the school last year. There was also a falling off in the Butler school where only 85 pupils had made application and twelve temporary teachers were in attendance. A somewhat similar condition of affairs existed in the Varnum school.

The high school was crowded, the attendance being considerably larger than last year, and in fact larger than any previous year, with the prospect of increasing before the end of the week. One gratifying thing here is that the pupils are older in years and seem to be more intent on their object of attending school.

Over in the Colburn school, there is a class of Armenians taught by one of their own nationality. The Edson school remains about the same as last year, in point of numbers, there being already 108 pupils for the six teachers.

The drawing and modelling classes in the Mann school. were well patronized, and will undoubtedly increase its membership, as it has done in previous years.

The teachers who were in charge of the schools last evening have been placed there temporarily and are subject to confirmation or rejection by the school board at its next meeting. It may be that some of them will be dropped unless the attendance picks up considerably.

This year's graduates of the training school have been given preference in the matter of filling vacancies in the corps of teachers.

It is expected that the committee on evening schools will pay an official visit to the schools shortly.

DONOVAN ROSSA

Hastened Back to America by His Wife.

HE WANTS TO KNOW WHO UHL IS

Airs His Grievance in a Letter to Cleveland.

NEW YORK, Oct. 23.—Edwin F. Uhl, assistant secretary of state at Washington, has declared that O'Donovan Rossa is not a citizen of the United States, although he has been voting here for a number of years on papers granted by Judge Larremore in the court of common pleas on Feb. 21, 1871. Mr. Uhl holds that these papers are worthless, on the ground that the qualification of five years' continuous residence was not complied with.

O'DONOVAN ROSSA.

Mr. Uhl's ruling on this subject accounts for Mr. Rossa's return from Europe last spring earlier than he intended. Uhl refused to grant him a passport, and he did not, in consequence, visit Scotland and England, where he intended to deliver some lectures. Rossa has sent a letter to President Cleveland reciting the facts in the case.

Before going to Europe last May, Rossa wrote to Mr. Uhl for a passport. This was refused. In his letter to Mr. Cleveland, Mr. Rossa says:

Complains to Cleveland.

"President Cleveland, who is this Mr. Uhl whom you have around you as president of your passport bureau in Washington! I have suffered somewhat by the refusal of Mr. Uhl to send me a passport when I was going to Europe last May. I had engagements made to give some lectures in Ireland, England and Scotland. I made arrangements to sail on the Campania from New York on May 19. On May 13 I wrote for the passport. It did not come before the 19th. I sailed on the 19th.

"On May 23 my wife got Mr. Uhl's letter refusing me a passport, and telling her I was no citizen of the United States. That letter threw her into sickness. She wrote to me telling me not to go into England or Scotland; that she had reasons for telling me so, and asking that I come back to America as soon as I had filled my engagements in Ireland. My wife bosses me, and I obeyed her orders.

Going Into Details.

"Who is this Mr. Uhl? And do you say that my citizen papers are bad? I lived here; did business here in New York in the year 1863. Barney Ryan, a deputy sheriff here now in New York, lived in the same house with me at Madison and New Chambers streets. Three brothers of mine were in the war. That year I took out my first papers. In July, 1865, I left New York for Ireland. In September, 1865, I was returning to America. On Friday evening of Sept. 15 I was packing my trunk, as I was to leave the cove of Cork for America the following Sunday.

"The soldiers of the English government in Ireland arrested me and put me in prison, and kept me in English prisons up to January, 1871. Then the English sent me from Chatham prison to New York, and next month I went before Judge Larremore and told my story in the application I made for full papers of citizenship.

"He gave them to me by virtue of that clause of the constitution which says that the five years' "consecutive residence" in the United States holds good for the man who has taken out his first papers and leaves the country with the intention of returning, but who is detained in any manner that makes it impossible for him to return, and returns when he can."

THE POLITICAL POT

Boiling Over in the Great Empire State.

BOTH PARTIES HUSTLING WITH ALL THEIR ENERGY.

The Fight Fiercely Waged in New York City.

NEW YORK, Oct. 23.—The Republican managers of the state campaign, while actively at work pushing the canvass in all parts of the state, say they are unable to find any distressing indications in the ranks, and in serene confidence are watching the attempts of their Democratic adversaries to adjust and harmonize the factional disturbances with which they are beset on all sides, especially in this city.

Ex-President Harrison will arrive here later in the week to attend to some private business, and while he is in the city it is Chairman Hackett's intention to arrange, if possible, a mammoth meeting, at which the ex-president will speak, and at which his former running mate, Mr. Morton, now the Republican candidate for governor, will be present.

Senator Hill spoke at Yonkers last night. He will speak at Brooklyn this afternoon and in New York and this vicinity until Friday, when he will return to the interior of the state. A great deal will depend upon the result of his visit and the conference he has with the state and local leaders.

The situation so far as the New York city and Brooklyn Democratic candidates for congress and assembly are concerned is very critical, with county Democratic candidates opposing the Tammany congressional and assembly candidates in this city, and Shepard candidates running against the regular nominees in the Brooklyn districts, save that represented by Coombs. There are nine congressional districts in this city and five in Brooklyn. The opposition of the county Democratic candidates of from one to four Tammany candidates in this city, and the Shepardites endanger four in the districts in Brooklyn.

As the margin by which the Democratic managers hope to carry the next house of representatives is very narrow, the situation is regarded as extremely grave at Democratic headquarters. All efforts heretofore made toward harmonizing differences to prevent the possibility of Republicans slipping in through Democratic divisions have proved ineffectual. Senator Faulkner, chairman of the congressional campaign committee, will be here again tomorrow to witness the result of the present effect.

Richard Croker and Perry Belmont, Mr. Cleveland's ex-minister to Spain, were at the Democratic headquarters yesterday regarding this matter. The rumor was rife and apparently well-founded that ex-Mayor Grace, who is at the head of the county Democracy organization, was willing to compromise on the basis of withdrawing the county Democracy candidates in seven of the New York city districts, if Tammany would withdraw ex-Senator Cantor in the Fifteenth and John Connolly in the Fourteenth, in order to give Robert Grier Monroe and Dewitt Warner clear fields.

The Tammany candidates for congress and for the assembly were represented as recalcitrant to Senator Hill. Mr. Croker and other leaders were said to be advising a policy of concession, but Lieutenant Governor Sheehan said last evening that no basis of agreement had yet been reached.

Hill Smoothing Difficulties.

At headquarters it was said that Senator Hill's campaigning trip in the state had been very successful in conciliating the opposing Democratic factions. Wherever possible, the Hill partisans were kept in the background, and the Cleveland Democrats managed the receptions and meetings.

Chairman Thatcher still insists that President Cleveland will speak in no uncertain tone at the right time. It is an open secret that a letter written by Judge Maynard, the unsuccessful Democratic candidate for supreme judge last year, detailing the manner in which his nomination was brought about and acquitting Senator Hill of responsibility therefor, is in existence, and it will probably be given out shortly.

Lieutenant Governor Sheehan gave out an interview in reply to the charges of colonization of voters made by the Republicans, in which he makes counter charges against them. He says that the Democratic committee have been repeatedly warned of the Republican colonization schemes, receiving such information from railroad officials and in other reliable manner.

A Question For the Courts.

NEW YORK, Oct. 23.—There is a deadlock over the Simpson-Campbell congressional fight. When the question was considered the Tammany commissioners offered a resolution recognizing Simpson as the Republican candidate from the Ninth district. This was lost, the Republican commissioners voting negatively. Then the Republican commissioners offered a resolution recognizing Campbell. This, too, was lost. The matter will now have to be decided by the courts.

Abbett Declines to Run.

CAMDEN, N. J., Oct. 23.—Hon. Leon Abbett has come out with a letter in which he upsets the calculations of the Democratic leaders in New Jersey by announcing that he is not a candidate for United States senator.

Tammanyite Withdraws.

NEW YORK, Oct. 23. — Timothy "Dry Dollar" Sullivan has filed with the commissioners the declination of Philip Wissig as Tammany candidate for assemblyman from the Third district.

Suicide by Fire.

HUDSON, N. Y., Oct. 23.—Mrs. Phœbe Morrison of West Lebanon committed suicide by saturating her clothing with kerosene and setting fire to it. Her husband ran to her rescue and his hands were so severely burned that amputation of the fingers of both will be necessary.

GIVEN TWO YEARS IN PRISON.

MORE SENTENCES BY THE HIGH COURT TODAY.

Judge Fessenden Not Slow in Acting When the Jury Returns a Verdict On the Several Cases.

At the beginning of the afternoon session the case of Geo. Howard of Dracut was tried. Howard was charged in the indictment with larceny of a horse from Thomas F. Fay in August, 1894, while the theft occurred in 1893. The mistake was rectified having been noticed first by the defendant.

Thomas F. Fay testified that the defendant formerly worked for him, after leaving his employ, he, with other men, camped out in Dracut and his horse was placed in pasture near them. The horse was stolen. Joseph L. Cleveland of Salem, N. H., saw the defendant with the stolen horse. Officer Scott of Dracut and Jos. F. Fay also testified.

For the defence Howard said he never had anything to do with the theft. He was away with Main's circus and was arrested in Chelsea.

The jury in the case of Patrick H. Shea charged with breaking and entering and larceny from a freight car returned a verdict of guilty of larceny and he was sentenced to the Mass. reformatory.

Henry Butlaw, his companion who is from Willimantic, Conn., was sentenced to the house of correction for one year.

T. J. Robinson pleaded guilty to the charge of breaking and entering Anderson's grocery store on Market street. He was sentenced to the Concord reformatory.

Thomas Rooney, who escaped from the Lowell jail, pleaded guilty. Rooney belongs in Stoneham and was serving a sentence of three months for drunkenness. He had been in 26 days when he escaped. He had a wife and six children, all of whom are too young to work and when he escaped, he intended to return but wished to make some money for his family before returning. He was sent back to serve out his sentence and was given three months in the house of correction besides.

John Hayes pleaded guilty to the charge of larceny of $150 worth of goods from a building on Eliot street, and hid them. Some one else found them. Hayes served two years for breaking and entering some 10 years ago and had served time for drunkenness. He was sentenced to the house of correction for two years.

Before court adjourned the jury in the case of George Howard returned a verdict of guilty.

For Governor:

HON. JOHN E. RUSSELL of Leicester.

For Congressman:

HON. GEO. W. FIFIELD of Lowell.

For Senator:

HON. PETER J. BRADY of Lowell.

QUEEN ALIX deserves a crown.

KNOX WILL be heard in self defence tonight.

THE REPUBLICANS will have a calamity gathering at Huntington hall tonight.

IT LOOKS as if the county ring were about to become famous. What hath Sheriff Cushing to say?

MUNICIPAL REFORM is in the air. The taxpayers want a good business administration of the city's affairs.

E. W. RODGERS does not seem to be very much afraid of getting into jail since he tackles the county sheriff.

THE EVENING schools have started up. Manual training is being neglected because of the dead lock in the board.

WILL THE board of trade please devise means of reducing the city's interest account? That will secure all the economic reforms needed.

MAYOR MATHEWS is revealing a queer state of affairs in the finances of Boston. This is the result of minority representation and state control.

PETER A. FAY is getting out a lot of circulars exposing the administration of the county ring. He will stir up the taxpayers to a sense of duty.

THE FIRST Chinese victory is reported from Chinese sources. The Celestial troops must have gotten into a fortification from which there was no escape.

MR. FOSS dicovers that the license commission will not redeem his promises and he cannot fulfill them himself. What a pickle. Goodness gracious "what's to be did?"

REV. HUGH MONTGOMERY denies the accuracy of the A. P. A. expose published in the Boston Post last Friday. He must know the oaths of this dark lantern order when he is able to say what they are not.

THE BOARD OF TRADE is pushing forward in its proposed mission of municipal reform. The plan to put the management of streets, sewers and commons in the hands of the city engineer is not considered a wise one; it is not favored by the tax payers to any extent and some go so far as to say it is all a scheme to benefit certain land owners in Ward Four. It would be better by far to place the necessary power in the hands of the chief executive to see that the work of these departments be carried out effectively. Had the mayor the power to suspend or remove heads of departments for mismanagement or incompetency the whole problem would be solved.

STAMP OUT HOODLUMISM.

The death of Patrick Buckley as a result of injuries sustained in being struck by a missile thrown by a desperado should be a lesson to the police.

It is high time that more active steps were taken to restrain hoodlumism. It is not uncommon to find a number of toughs parading the streets at night, swearing among themselves and at passers by, throwing stones at inoffensive people, attacking women and children and in a thousand ways making themselves a pest to the community.

The police have not dealt with the boodlums as they should have done. It is time that Chief Davis would change his policy in regard the element that pervades streets and alleys at night ready to commit any kind of depredation or assault. They have been tolerated too long and Buckley's death is an object lesson that should arouse the police to a sense of their duty in the matter. It is reported by an eye witness that an officer was asked to arrest one of the stone throwers while within his reach but instead of doing so he stood still as if afraid to move or unwilling to risk the ordeal. Was it cowardice or stupidity that pinned the officer to the ground when he should have made an effort to catch the man who had attempted to kill another with a missile? This question interests the public because an officer that lets such occurrences take place under his very eye is not the kind of a man who will check hoodlumism.

THE CENTRAL Labor Union has endorsed Hon. Peter J. Brady for senator. Judging from his record in the legislature one might suppose the vote would be unanimous because he lost no opportunity of advancing every labor measure as far as lay in his power. To support a populist candidate would be the height of ingratitude as well as a direct blow at the interests of labor because there is no hope of electing any populist candidate. Mr. Connolly, Mr. Weeks and other men identified with the populist party are in full sympathy with organized labor. In fact they spend much of their time working in its behalf; but if they were a thousand times more valuable, a vote given to either would be thrown away so far as the chance of electing either candidate is concerned. While the contest between Brady and Foss will be very close a small number of votes taken from Brady or from the democratic strength and given to a third party candidate will be just so much in Foss's favor.

THE DEMOCRATS of the Fifth district are confident of electing Mr. Fifield to congress. They like his democracy, they like his record as an employer of labor and they like his tariff policy which is to let it alone for the present. Many republicans have the same sentiment in regard to Mr. Fifield's candidacy so that the prospect of a solid majority is very encouraging.

A TYPHOID epidemic on. Is this from the contamination of Hale's brook, from the Merrimack river water or from bad vaults? Will the board of health or the water board please answer?

THE MCKINLEY croakers complain about a reduction in prices of the necessaries of life. The cost of living has come down and will be lower still. That is a benefit to the people.

COLD THAT BURNS.

Its Effects Are Not Very Different From Scorching by Heat.

Burning is usually associated with heat, and it seems a misnomer to speak of cold burns. Chemists tell us that there is really no such thing as cold, which is relative heat, and that the lowest temperature yet registered is some degrees above absolute cold.

At a meeting of the Swiss Society of Natural Sciences at Lausanne M. Raoul Pictet gave some particulars concerning cold burns experienced by himself and assistants during his investigations of the lowest temperature attainable. There are two degrees of burns. In one case the skin reddens at first and turns blue the following day, and subsequently the area of the spot expands until it becomes nearly double its original dimensions. The "burn," which is usually not healed until five or six weeks after its occurrence, is accompanied by a very painful itching on the affected spot and the surrounding tissues. When the burning is more serious, produced by longer contact with the cold body, a burn of the second degree is experienced. In this case the skin is rapidly detached, and all parts reached by the cold behave like foreign bodies. A long and stubborn suppuration sets in, which does not seem to accelerate the reconstitution of the tissues. The wounds are malignant and scar very slowly in a manner entirely different from burns produced by fire.

On one occasion, when M. Pictet was suffering from a severe burn due to a drop of liquid air, he accidentally scorched the same hand very seriously. The scorched portion was healed in 10 or 12 days, but the wound produced by the cold burn was open for upward of six months. In order to try the effect of radiation in dry cold air M. Pictet held his bare arm up to the elbow in a refrigerating vessel maintained at 105 degrees, when a sensation of a peculiarly distinct character was felt over the whole skin and throughout the muscles. At first this sensation was not disagreeable, but gradually it became decidedly so, and after three or four minutes the skin turned blue, and the pain became more intense and deep seated. On withdrawing the arm from the refrigerator at the end of ten minutes a strong reaction was experienced, accompanied by a superficial inflammation of the skin.—Newcastle Chronicle.

The Safer Way.

Colonel Corkscrieugh was a dignified citizen, with a blooming red nose, and while he had his weaknesses he was held to be scrupulously honest. One day a business man called him into his office.

"Colonel," he said, "I want to leave a valuable package with you for a week or so."

"Very good, sir," replied the colonel. "Where is it?"

"It's here in my desk. I want to say to you that it is a gallon of whisky. Are you to be trusted with it?"

The colonel's face flushed.

"My honor's at stake, sir," he returned haughtily.

The colonel's eyes shone.

The man took the demijohn out, and the colonel inspected it carefully and satisfied himself that it was as represented. Then he set it down on the floor.

"Excuse me, sir," he said slowly, "but I think you had better store that in the vault of the safe deposit company."—Detroit Free Press.

It is a village on a Bengalese highway, a village of 30 or 40 huts strung out in line, with the jungle for a background and the wretched dwellings almost hidden from sight by a row of trees along the road. It is high noon now, and as we rest under a tree and look into the village a procession of people comes toward us. It is not a funeral procession, not a march, not a band going out to work or worship. It is the flight of 200 panic stricken men, women and children. Each one bears a burden, and each one looks around in apprehension and increases his pace as the village is left behind. Are they flying from fever or cholera or dread of a jungle fire which may surround them? Have they heard that a band of robbers is lurking in the tangled forest beyond their patty fields, waiting for night to come to descend upon the village and rob the people even of their ragged loin clothes? Is there danger that a storm away up in the hills will overflow the ditches and drown out the village?

No, it is nothing they fear, and yet it is something they fear worse than death itself. Only an hour ago a native runner entered the village, pale and breathless, to announce that a man eating tiger had taken up his quarters on the highway between that and the village five miles to the north. It is not fear, but apprehension, a nervous terror, a feeling of helplessness, which has sent them flying. Where to? No one knows nor cares nor has considered that question. The idea is to be miles away before the sun goes down and the man eater is ready to go in search of his evening meal. He may seek it in that village, in the other, in one a dozen miles away. The man eater may crouch in one spot for hours, waiting for a victim to pass, or he may roam the country over from dark to dawn. It is not this village alone. The people are flying from four others in the same panic stricken manner. Seven hundred men, women and children leaving home behind, 1,000 acres of crops left to ripen and rot, because a man eater is abroad, and no one knows who will be his next victim, although the Bengalese believe that one's days are numbered, and that death must come when the mark has been reached. An hour after the flight the vultures and hyenas are fighting over the spoils left behind.

The sun hastens into the west, sinks lower and lower, and by and by the red ball of fire drops out of sight, and darkness comes. There is no twilight, no gloaming. Five minutes ago it was daylight. Now it is night. Two miles to the north a nullah or creek comes down from the east and crosses the highway. It flows in the bed of a ravine choked with bush and brier and plant and creeper, and there is so little water that there is no bridge over the highway. Once over the highway it flows into another ravine, equally dark and gloomy, and 100 miles away its waters find a great river. At the first notes of the night birds the man eater is aroused. His lair is a mile from the highway and in a tangle so thick that men might have looked for him in vain. He wakes from his deep sleep with dry lips and parched tongue, and he whines and complains as he creeps down to the brook and searches for a pool into which to plunge his head until it is almost immersed. He drinks long and deep, like a horse which has traversed the desert from dawn to dark. When his thirst is at last satisfied, he stretches himself, growls his satisfaction and turns and faces down the ravine. There is nothing left of the man he killed the night before. What he did not eat the jackals were waiting to devour. He is hungry again, and he must kill to live.

With a footfall as soft as that of a rabbit, though betraying his presence every minute or two by an angry snarl at bush or rock or gliding serpent, the man eater makes his way down the ravine. At the highway, before he breaks cover, he listens to the north and the south to learn if anything is moving. There is no one to see him, nothing to disturb him, and with a couple of bounds and a catlike hiss he is across the road and hidden in bushes beyond. He turns as he enters the bushes and faces the road and his lair. It is the craft of the man eater to do this, to face in the direction he means to drag his victim. An hour goes by. Two hours slip away. The people have been warned, and not a human being has traveled this road since the sun was within an hour of setting. The man eater has settled himself down with many a complaining growl and whine, but not to sleep while he waits. His ears work nervously, and his eyes blaze, and his tail quivers as he bides his time.

A belated villager, who has been to a distant market, with his produce loaded on the back of a patient, lumbering ox—he has not heard of the man eater, of the flight of his family and friends. He rides the ox as he returns. He fears there may be a tiger or panther lurking along the highway, and when not absolutely quiet he is whispering prayers for protection. The tiger hears the step of the ox a long way off. His keen sighted eyes tell him in the darkness what is approaching. The ox advances with a plod, plod, plod, looking furtively to right and left at intervals, but scenting no danger. He comes to the creek, swallows the cud he has been chewing as he plodded along and lowers his head to drink. As suddenly as the report of a gun reaches one's ears, he hears an angry roar, feels sharp claws pricking his flesh, and as he rushes up the road through the darkness he is alone. The tiger's spring was not for him. Before the ox has galloped a mile the man eater has dragged his victim half way up the ravine to the spot where we found him as the sun went down. He will feast again tonight and sleep away the morrow.

M. QUAD.

Painted Arab Girls.

Shief is a very picturesque spot perched on a rock, with towers and turrets constructed of sun dried brick, only here, as elsewhere in these valleys, the houses are so exactly the same color as the rock behind them that they lose their effect. The rich have evidently recognized this difficulty and whitewash their houses, but in the poorer villages there is no whitewash, and consequently nothing to make them stand out from their surroundings. Arab girls before they enter the harem and take the veil are a curious sight to behold. Their bodies and faces are dyed a bright yellow with turmeric. On this ground they paint black lines with antimony over their eyes. The fashionable color for the nose is red, green spots adorn the cheek, and the general aspect is grotesque beyond description.

It is the universal female dress in Hadramut and looks as if the fashion had not changed since the days when Hazarmaveth, the patriarch, settled in this valley and gave it his name (Genesis x, 28). The tall, tapering straw hat worn by these women when in the fields contributes with the mask to make the Hadrami females as externally repulsive as the most jealous of husbands could desire.—Nineteenth Century.

Painted Like a Ruffian.

Caravaggio was originally a hod carrier and was afterward employed by the painters in the Vatican to grind their colors. He was fond of depicting scenes in low life, and it was said of him that he painted like a ruffian because he was a ruffian. His "Entombment of Christ," in the Vatican, was modeled on the funeral of a gypsy chief.—Exchange.

ENGLISH ON THE TONGUE.

WORDS TO SNARE SOME SLIPSHOD SPEAKERS.

Origin of the Term Trolley as Applied to Electric Cars—An Interesting Fact About the Steam Power of the World.

There are few words in the English language of such comprehensive appropriateness as the word "things." We put on and take off "things." We put down and take up "things." We walk over "things" and pick "things" up and put "things" away. We love "things" and hate "things" and consider "things" and think about "things." We look beyond the "things" seen to the "things" not seen. And these are "things" temporal, and those are "things" eternal.

And each and every one of these "things" has a different significance and belongs to a different class. There are material "things" among them and immaterial "things." They are physical and mental, of heaven and earth, of time and of eternity. A word of no special definition, it designates everything in turn, for it may be anything, it may be nothing.

It is a facile snare to the slipshod writer. Dilating on the beauties of "everything," this "lovely thing" or that "exquisite thing" tempts him to rest satisfied with the yielding expression which saves search for a more specific word. It is the ready recourse of the shallow clatterer, who calls her friend a "sweet thing" as frequently as she speaks of her enemy as a "spiteful thing." It is the refuge of the lazy, the negligent, the ignorant talker of any age, to whom the proper names of articles are superfluous so long as the word "things" exists in the dictionary.

So universally misused, abused and overworked is this general term that Harper's Bazar advises as "the proper thing" under the circumstances to ignore it so far as possible in our own conversation and in the talk of other people and to insist that ideas be conveyed by words which mean exactly what is intended to be expressed, instead of by a word which means anything or nothing at all.

Origin of the Term "Trolley."

Most persons who use the word "trolley" do not know the origin of this term or why this name was given to the apparatus by which the electricity is conveyed from an overhead wire. It is traced as follows by Golden Days:

Twenty years ago the word was used to designate "a form of truck which can be tilted for carrying railroad materials or the like." This is the only definition of the word in Webster's dictionary of the edition of 1848. In the edition of 1892 of the same work three other definitions are added: 1. "A narrow cart that is pushed by hand or drawn by an animal." It is noted that this meaning of the word is in use in England, not in the United States. 2. "A truck from which the load is suspended on some kinds of cranes." This meaning is technical, according to Webster, and employed only in speaking of machinery. 3. "(Electric railway.) A truck which travels along the fixed conductors and forms a means of connection between them and a railway car."

It is easy to see how the primitive form of the electric trolley, which travels upon the wires, came to receive its name from its resemblance to other types of trolley, and the name, having been immediately given to this primitive form, was naturally retained when the method of connection was changed from a little truck moving on a wire to a mast having at its end a wheel pressing on the lower surface of the wire.

An Interesting Fact.

Some captious critics have wondered why Longfellow selected a chestnut tree as the one of all others which overshadowed the village smithy in his famous poem. These critics are probably unaware that the poet had a twofold reason for so doing, says the London Ironmonger. In the first place, the chestnut is among the most umbrageous of trees, and in the second place the horse chestnut bears on every twig near the "milky cones" at blooming time the imprint in miniature of a horseshoe, perfect in shape and including the nails. It is only reasonable to suppose that the original idea of the horseshoe was taken from this curious feature of the chestnut tree, and that is no doubt why the American poet—who, like Tennyson, was a deep student of botany—selected the chestnut as the tree most appropriate to overspread the smithy of the village blacksmith.

The Steam Power of the World.

From figures credited to the bureau of statistics in Berlin it appears that of the steam engines now working in the world four-fifths have been constructed during the last 25 years. France has 70,500 stationary and locomotive boilers; Germany, 59,000 land boilers, 1,700 ship boilers and 10,000 locomotives; Austria, 12,000 boilers and 2,800 locomotives. The working steam engines of the United States represent 7,500,000 horsepower; of England, 7,000,000 horsepower; Germany, 4,500,000 horsepower; France, 3,000,000 horsepower; Austria, 1,500,000 horsepower. This estimate does not include the locomotives, whose number in the world is 105,000, representing a total of 3,000,000 horsepower. The world's steam engines, therefore, aggregate more than [illegible]000,000 horsepower, equivalent approximately to the work of 1,000,000,000 men.

The "Wabbling" of the North Pole.

It has long been known that the earth's axis varies in an irregular way as regards its relation to fixed objects in space, but it is now reported as the result of recent observations that the earth's axis is a bit loose as regards the globe itself. The effect is that the north pole wabbles slightly. The variation in position is not over 50 feet, however, so there is no danger that any explorers who have gone to the arctic regions without this warning will get hurt by going too near.

Buried Head to the West.

An old custom prevails in some sections at the present day of burying a dead body with the head to the west. The original reason was that the dead may face to the east when the judgment day comes. A story is told to the effect that the first preacher at Easthampton, N. Y., directed that he be buried facing the west, that he might face his congregation at the day of judgment. He died 200 years ago and more.

A Large Chime of Bells.

The largest chime of bells said to have ever been made in this country has been ordered for St. James' church, Chicago, according to an exchange. It will be made in Baltimore and contain 17 bells, the largest weighing 5,000 pounds, and the total weight of the bells and fixtures will be over 25 tons.

Deductive.

"Yes."

Leading Up to It.

"Can I see you apart for a moment?"

"You mean alone, don't you?"

"Yes. A loan. That's it exactly. I want to borrow five."—Indianapolis Journal.

ODD NEW YORK ORDINANCES.

The Chapter on Nuisances Contains Many Interesting Requirements.

Some of the local regulations under which New Yorkers live which it is a legal offense to violate or ignore are of a peculiar character. What is known as article 24 of the Revised Ordinances—the chapter on nuisances—is perhaps the most peculiar of all. Any person, it says, who shall permit any bear or other noxious or dangerous animal to run at large, or who shall lead any such animal with chain or rope or other appliance, whether such animal be muzzled or unmuzzled, in any street, avenue, lane, highway or public place within the corporate limits of New York shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. Any person, says section 240 of this chapter, who shall raise or fly any kite in any street, lane, avenue or public place south of Fourteenth street shall be fined $5. No goat shall be permitted to go at large on any street, avenue, lane, alley, pier or wharf under penalty of "$3 for every such goat found at large, to be paid by the owner or by the person having charge, care or keeping of such goat."

As goats cannot be impounded, the arrest of a stray goat in conformity with the ordinance quoted, even if the goat's defense did not make such attempted action impracticable, would be an ill advised proceeding, as the board of aldermen has not provided any place to which an offending goat may be taken. Section 236 declares—same chapter of nuisances—that no person shall bring into the city of New York or have in his, her or their possession in said city any oysters between the 1st of May and the 1st of September in any year under penalty of a fine of $5. No person shall swim or bathe in any of the waters within the jurisdiction of New York, except in public or private bathing houses, unless covered with a bathing suit. No grocer, innkeeper, tavern keeper or any other person shall have in his, her or their premises any flying horse or horses or whirligig or roundabout or other machinery or device, by whatever name it may be called, under penalty of $50.

No person shall use or perform with or hire or procure or abet any other person to use or perform with any hand organ in any of the streets or public places of New York before the hour of 9 a. m. or after the hour of 7 p. m. each day, nor during any part of the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday. No person shall perform upon a hand organ except such organ is licensed, but it is a question which has not yet been settled whether, in the view of the board of aldermen, a man who procures or abets another to play upon an unlicensed organ becomes per se an accessory before or after, and subject, therefore, to a fine of $3.75, more or less.

No person shall beat any drum or instrument for the purpose of attracting the attention of passengers in any street or lane of New York to any show of beasts or bird or other things in this city. No person shall place or suspend or cause or procure to be placed or suspended in or over any street of New York any cloth, yarn or garment for the purpose of drying the same under the penalty of $10. No person shall expose in any street, lane or avenue in New York any table or device upon which or by which a game of chance or hazard can be played.

The Fur Seal.

The fur seal—its name should be furry sea lion—is the most celebrated of all our fur bearers, and the United States government has been as active in protecting it from destruction as it was indifferent to the fate of the buffalo millions. If our great international dispute with England and Canada over the fur seal had arisen 70 years ago, before the days of peaceful arbitration, there would surely have been a war over it. Nor is our interest in our fur seal to be wondered at when we stop to consider that from 1870 to 1890 our national treasury received $6,000,000 from the Alaska Commercial company as royalty on the animals killed—six-sevenths of the purchase price of Alaska.

When to this we add the amount received in a 20 per cent import duty on the dressed skins as they came back to us from the English dyers, the total revenue derived from the fur seal in 20 years amounts to the enormous sum of $8,500,000. Such an animal was worth saving from destruction. No other animal ever became such a bone of contention between two great nations for a long period, the discussion winding up with a high and mighty conference of arbitration.

As usual, the whole trouble arose through the greediness of a few irresponsible and lawless individuals. The sealers of the Pacific coast insisted upon taking fur seals by shooting them in the open sea, by which wasteful process seven were lost for every three secured. But if it were not for the loss of money revenue derived from this animal, it is quite certain the government would have allowed the wasteful slaughter to go on until the last seal was dead.—St. Nicholas.

Well Named.

The simple process of discovering the meaning of a foreign word or phrase by virtue of its sound sometimes leads to peculiar results.

"Shure, an fwhat is this briggy brag the misthress is all the toime talkin to yez about an tellin yez to be so careful av it?" inquired the cook of the housemaid in a large family mansion. "Fwhat does briggy brag mane, Oi dunno?"

"It ain't briggy brag; it's bricky brack," returned the housemaid moodily, "an Oi'm thinkin if 'twas yersilf had the care av it yez wouldn't be long foindin out fwhat it meant. It's Frinch for breakety break, that's what it is. It's a lot av little ornamints an joogs an vases jist made fer ketchin in the dusther an draggin thimselves off onter the floor an smashin into bits befoor a poor hard wurrkin gell's oiyes. That's what bricky brack manes, an a good name it is fer the whole lot av 'em!"—Youth's Companion.

One of California's Sylvan Giants.

"Goliath," one of the largest of the famous "big trees" of California, measures 25 feet in diameter at the ground and 20½ feet eight feet higher up. "Goliath" is perfectly healthy and solid throughout. It has been estimated that this forest giant, denuded of his branches, would weigh 100,000 tons, and that it would "saw" 2,000,000 feet of clear lumber. The branches and tops would make not less than 100 cords of wood. Heller estimates the weight of its leaves alone at 2½ tons.—St. Louis Republic.

Unfair Reasoning.

He—I'm going to ask you a favor.

She—It is granted before you ask it.

He (triumphantly)—Well, I was going to ask you for a kiss.

She (breaking away)—Wait a minute. I said it was granted before you asked for it. So you must have had it.—New York Herald.

Referred to the Proper Department.

"Waiter!" sharply called one Rivers, who was dining at a restaurant. "I called for ham and eggs, and you've brought me roast beef! Hasn't this institution a—a managing editor?"

"Yes, sah," replied the waiter, proceeding stiffly to gather up the rejected dish. "But this belongs to the department of the exchange editor, sah."—Chicago Tribune.

HERMIT OF SAN CLEMENTS.

San Clemente island, which lies 60 miles west one-half south of Point Loma lighthouse, on the southern coast of California, is 18½ miles long, with an average width of 2½ miles and an area of 51½ square miles. It is a lonesome spot, suggestive of Spanish buccaneers and pirates generally. It rears its ugly head of black plutonic rock nearly 2,000 feet above the sea level, and in the deep gulches treasures a few sumac trees as a miser guards his gold. Cactus abounds. Natural water tanks in the rock are found on the edges of the plateaus. They were worn by rocks whirled around in holes during heavy rainfalls. The water in these tanks has saved the lives of many a thirsty mariner who has put in there for a supply of the life giving fluid. It was here that Cabrillo landed in October, 1542, after discovering San Diego harbor. He named the island La Victoria, after one of his smaller ships, the present name having been given a century later.

There is but one human being on San Clemente, the hermit herder, Tom Gallagher. Tom is a character with a history. His shaggy head and beard and curious attire give him the look of a savage, but Tom is very much of a white man in his heart, even though he has lived alone with his sheep for over 20 years. Occasionally a straggling junk seeking abalone, or now and then a fisherman, stops in the cave of San Clemente, brings Tom the news and furnishes him with supplies. To loosen Tom's tongue the explorer must have handy a chew of tobacco and a drink of whisky. He has a favorite water tank somewhere, but he never tells its location. Whisky is a novelty to this hermit, but it never causes him to forget himself sufficiently to reveal the details of his mainland life. He was a fisherman somewhere between San Diego and Monterey bay. He had good prospects, but one day he took it into his head to live alone on San Clemente. That is about all that Tom will say of himself.

There are people who claim to know Tom's history, and it is a romantic story, they say, with a love affair in it, of course. The woman jilted him, and he sought the island cloister. Tom lives in a comfortable hut, with a vegetable patch, chickens, a goat and his sheep. His is a regular Robinson Crusoe outfit, except that there is no man Friday to serve him. This lord of San Clemente does not want servants. He simply wants to be let alone, with only his animals and his gun for companions.—San Francisco Chronicle.

WORSE THAN HADES.

Terrible Fate of a Man Who Could Not Enter Heaven.

Mrs. Blank went shopping. Mr. Blank went with her. No one can explain just why he went, for she didn't positively compel it, and he is still regarded as sane! He went anyhow.

She wanted buttons. Those at Jenkins' store were too small, much too small. So she went to Kahn's and Poznanski's and the Merchants' Supply, then to Poznanski's and the Merchants' Supply and Kahn's. At Jenkins' again they showed her the same buttons, and she found them too large. Blank guessed it a case of expansion caused by the heat. It seemed hot to him. She got almost to another place, not quite, for they saw her coming and locked up for the night. So she went home.

That night Blank's hard breathing woke his wife, so she woke him in turn.

"What's the matter?" she demanded.

"I—I had a dreadful dream," he gasped. "I thought we were both dead, that you had gone to heaven, and that I—I hadn't!"

"How perfectly awful," she cried, grasping him convulsively around the neck, "to be separated, and"—

"We—we weren't separated," moaned Blank, with a shudder. "I—I could have endured that! But no—no, I dreamed you were to be allowed to go shopping forever, and that I was condemned to go with you!"—Kate Field's Washington.

Next to Ham.

They tell a pretty good story of a tourist who ventured beyond Deadwood. He was determined to see all there was that could be called wild and woolly and immediately demanded to know where he could ride on a real stagecoach. The Deadwood stagecoaches of dime novel fame are rotting, unused and unhonored, on the sides of the hills, but a stage line still runs between Deadwood and Spearfish. Perched beside the driver of this stage, the tourist was delighted to find that this man had really driven a coach in the good old days. All efforts to draw out some story or even a sage remark which could be carefully treasured and repeated were failures. They were bowling along the side of a creek, and the tourist finally said:

No response.

"Isn't there trout in this stream?"

"Umph!"

"Fine fish, sir."

No response.

"Don't you like trout?" asked the traveler in desperation, turning in his seat in a way that demanded an answer.

"Next to ham," was the surly response.

The astonished tourist was delighted with the result of his efforts when he finally figured out that ham was once a luxury and trout an everyday diet in that country.—Chicago Tribune.

She Shared Lola's Bonbons.

A west side belle has as a pet a fine greyhound which answers to the name of Lola. One of the young woman's many admirers recently sent her a large box of very choice bonbons of a more than usually expensive brand. The pert young miss acknowledged them as follows:

DEAR MR. ——: Thanks for those delicious bonbons. Lola and I are enjoying them together.

To this the young man promptly replied:

DEAR MISS ——Of course you are most welcome to the bonbons, and I'm glad you like them, but as a matter of fact they were intended for Lola exclusively.

And now the west side belle doesn't speak to him, and she has confided to Lola that he is a horrid man anyhow.—New York Herald.

The Second Marriage.

A quiet wedding either at home or church is in every way the most suitable for a woman about to be married the second time. And she should not, under any circumstances, wear either a white gown, a veil or orange blossoms. A costume of pale gray or a delicate lilac would be both pretty and suitable.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Most of the so called marble houses of the Rome of Augustus were not such in reality. The plasterer's art had then reached a high state of perfection and gave to stucco the appearance of the finest marble.

Somewhat In the Same Line.

"Beg pardon, sir," said the passenger in the skullcap, tired of the monotony of the journey and desirous of scraping an acquaintance with the man in the next seat, "are you traveling for some house?"

"No, sir," replied the other. "I am not in business. I am a Universalist preacher."

FROM OUR 5 O'CLOCK EDITION Of Yesterday.

HIGH COURT IS SITTING.

JUDGE FESSENDEN IS EXPECTED TO GIVE HEAVY SENTENCES.

Three Prisoners Sent Away For Short Terms Today—Trial of Cases of Breaking and Entering.

The criminal session of the Superior court opened this morning at 10 o'clock in the court house on Gorham street, Judge Fessenden presiding. Prayer was offered by Rev. J. M. Greene.

The attendance was very large, as is the case generally at criminal sessions.

The juries were drawn and the first selected as foreman, George G. Hill of Malden.

The case of Joseph Daigle for alleged burglary of and larceny from the house of John P. Quinn was called first. Daigle pleaded not guilty and was without counsel.

This case was put aside for a while at the request of the district attorney and that of Patrick H. Shea for alleged burglary of a freight car on the night of July 25 was called. Henry Butlaw who is also in this case pleaded guilty.

Shea was also without counsel and for that reason the district attorney did not make any opening or close as is the custom.

After damaging evidence against the prisoner by witness, Shea said, in defence that he met Butlaw on the track and told him not to break the seal on the car, going away from him immediately afterwards.

After a somewhat lengthy charge by Judge Fessenden, owing to the fact of it being the first case the jury retired at 11.40 o'clock.

Thomas J. Savage pleaded guilty to the charge of escaping from the work house. He was sent there for seven months, for larceny and drunkenness, in August, 1893. In the following month he scaled a wall, making his escape and was not caught until quite recently. Savage said that his crime was not great. He was put to work among crazy people and paupers and could not stand the sights he saw. Not being transferred to some other part of the building he took French leave. Savage was sent back to the workhouse to serve out his old sentence and an additional sentence of 20 days in the house of correction was imposed.

James Hicks of Wakefield, pleaded guilty to the charge of breaking and entering the pawn shop of Isaac Gordon and larceny therefrom. He was sentenced on the first count to a term of 15 months to the house of correction.

Neil McCrash, who pleaded guilty to the charge of breaking and entering Spencer's stone shed, was sentenced to the horse of correction for one year.

The case of Thomas Rooney, for escaping from the jail was next called. Rooney pleaded not guilty and had no counsel, but wanted one. He was given time in which to procure an attorney.

and smoke Tower's corner.

The Misses McSorley were thrown from their team on Middlesex street, yesterday afternoon, but escaped with slight injuries.

The alarm from box 17 was occasioned by a blaze in an ash barrel in the house of J. A. Knowles, corner of Branch and Walker streets.

Port 185, G. A. R., will hold its supper and concert tonight to raise money to purchase portraits of Gen. Washington in public schools.

The ingrain weavers will hold their second social in Associate hall, Friday night, and if it is as successful as the previous one the hall will be crowded.

Notwithstanding the abundant warning that all water bills must be paid the present week there will be a score or more come under the shut-off penalty on next Monday. Strange fact, too.

Road Race on Saturday.

The Vesper road race will occur on Saturday at the boulevard. Afterwards there will be an eight mile race and entries can be made with A. E. Rhodes. Emil Hansen, and Dr. Snyder will act as handicapper.

School Board Will Meet.

The school committee will hold its regular meeting next Monday evening. The illness of George M. Harrigan will prevent his attendance, but he is paired with Rev Mr. Greene who will also be unable to be present.

Instruction For Our Teachers.

Miss W. Bertha Hintz, sketch artist of Boston, gave a lesson in sketch work, to the school teachers of this city in High school hall yesterday afternoon. Each teacher is provided with blackboard paper on which she sketches, and whatever work she does becomes her property. Miss Hintz will give a lesson each afternoon, excepting Saturday, this week.

She will also visit some of the schools during the week, and assist the teachers in sketch-work. She was secured to give these lessons by Supt Whitcomb, at a request of a number of the teachers.

Cash, Courage and Capacity.

Under this heading O'Sullivan Bros. announce in today's issue their great purchase of nearly 500 pairs of ladies' $5 kid button and lace boots at 40 per cent. reduction. In these days of large deals it is only the firm with large capacity, courage and cash that such inducements are offered to, as they only can handle them. In this case the ladies who wear fine shoes will have an opportunity to get fitted with $5 boots at $3, and, judging from the vast patronage O'Sullivan Bros. enjoy, even as large a purchase as 500 pairs won't last long. To even things up 140 pair men's $4 shoes are thrown in at $3.

THE PYTHIAN SWINDLER.

He Has Reaped Over $400 On His Bogus Drafts.

The man who has been swindling K. of P. lodges in New England and New York, is now operating in Pennsylvania, with the bogus drafts for sick benefits.

Master of Exchequer A. G. Prasser has written to Mr. Wright giving the following description of the swindler: About 5 feet 6 or 7 inches in height, medium build, dark complexion, small dark mustache, medium small hands, wore kid gloves, light brown overcoat and latest style hat. He "appeared much hurt when he could not get the order cashed."

Among the swindler's latest pilferings the following have been reported: Oct. 18, M. of E., C. S. Wise of Buehler lodge 269, Marysville, Perry Co., Pa., cashed order 565 on Wamesit lodge, dated Oct. 9, for $20, drawn in favor of George T. Curtin and giving the names of C. C. and K. R. S. of Wamesit lodge as C. A. Wilson and J. B. Swift.

W. J. Redfern of Wilmerding lodge No. 319, Wilmerding, Alleghany county, Pa., cashed a bogus order for $20 drawn in favor of Walter S. Mayo. This was prior to the 13th inst.

Under date of Oct. 17, H. E. Leader, K. of R. and S. of the Blair lodge, Altoona, Pa., writes that his lodge cashed a draft for $20 drawn in favor of Geo. T. Curtin. It was alleged draft 565 dated Oct. 9, and the officers names were given as at Buehler lodge.

On Saturday Wamesit lodge was drawn on through the First National bank for another bogus draft dated Sept. 24, cashed by Silver Cross lodge, Gloversville, N. Y., for the swindler, who there gave his name as J. F. Aldrich.

The sum of $400 has already been secured by the schemer.

Cards for the opening were issued and bowling was free during the evening. A Lowell delegation headed by Philip J. Farley, Esq., and John B. Swift went down yesterday morning.

The Miserables team was also present and showed the large audience who witnessed the practice play how the record breakers knock down the pins. It was a great sight for the Lowell boys and they were on their mettle. The Continental orchestra of Providence gave an excellent concert during the evening. The large alleys were decorated with bunting and the national colors.

Besides bowling one may also enjoy a game of pool or billiards, for adjoining the alleys is a parlor containing ten tables.

The upper floor of the building is used as a hall for dramatic performances, balls, parties and receptions.

The proprietors have been very fortunate in securing John J. Fallon, a former Lowell boy, as manager of the alleys. Mr. Fallon is very well known in this city, Boston and in fact throughout Eastern Massachussetts. He is always attentive to whatever business he undertakes, and his every effort is to advance the interests of his employer.

While in this city, he managed the Eagle shoe store on Dutton street and afterwards entered the employ of Dyer Bros., in So. Boston.

He is anxious to have his old Lowell friends visit Providence and assures them a cordial welcome.

Miss Tucker's Return.

One of the best pleased audiences seen in Music hall was present last night at the opening performance of Miss Ethel Tucker and her own company. "Our Ethel" must have felt a decided thrill as she came on the stage to see the host of friendly faces and hear the cordial welcome accorded her. She showed her appreciation of the reception for her work as the poor Cricket was equal to the best she has ever done in this city. In all the varying moods of the character she was equally at home and so closely was her audience interested that even when the curtain finally fell they wanted to call her out again. Her company is an excellent one, individually and collectively. The costumes, scenery and appointments are deserving of praise. "Fanchon" will be repeated tonight. Wilkie Collins famous play "The New Magdalen" will be the bill for Wednesday and Thursday nights. Also for special ladies reception matinee, Wednesday afternoon, when Miss Tucker will be glad to meet the ladies of Lowell, immediately after the matinee.

The local people's party rallied to the number of 200 in Jackson hall last night. John J. Ryan of Lawrence presided and the gubernatorial candidate, David Taylor of Boston spoke, giving long and careful attention to socialism and its growth, arraigning the present political and economic systems, and scoring the capitalistic classes. His closing argument was that socialistic labor is a party through which the people can get their rights.

DEFINITE NEWS

Of the Czar's Condition is Hard to Find.

SOME RELIABLE OLD WORLD NEWSPAPER GOSSIP.

On the Future of Russia's Royal Family.

LONDON, Oct. 23.—In all the continental capitals and London there have been streams of callers—official dignitaries, aristocrats and humble people—at the Russian embassies. To these, however, little information concerning the czar was vouchsafed, and that little consisted of gloomy forebodings. Prayers and masses were unceasingly offered from St. Petersburg to Vladivostok.

A dispatch from St. Petersburg says that besides the offering of prayers for the recovery of the czar in all of the churches, the holy synod has ordered that there be prayers for the same end in the army and navy on board the vessels of the Russian Pacific and Mediterranean squadrons. Archbishop Moghileff has ordered prayers in all the Catholic churches.

The Times' Vienna correspondent telegraphs that it is announced from Sofia, Bulgaria, that no special services have been held there for the recovery of the czar. The clergy appear to have been instructed from headquarters.

The wild rumors reported from St. Petersburg were repeated yesterday in still wilder form. From Moscow comes a report that there are people there who insist that the czarewitch has refused to ascend the throne, and that the czar in order to compel him has ordered his marriage to Princess Alix. The Muscovites fear that should the rumors prove true, they will have to face the gravest peril possible. While the people crowd the churches to pray for the czar, the fears that the rumor has truth gives added fear for their petitions.

The question of succession still holds the principal place in the flood of statements, rumors and surmises. The Cologne Gazette prints a St. Petersburg telegram stating that the czar has given orders for a settlement of the succession to the imperial council. He has advised that Grand Duke George, his second son, should, on account of the state of his health, renounce his claim in favor of his brother, Grand Duke Michael, who ought to take the oath as the heir presumptive to the throne.

Czarewitch Is Obstinate.

The relations between the czar and czarewitch do not appear to be of the best. The statements, however, are unfounded that the czar had a heated quarrel with his son, which excited him in a manner dangerous to one of his condition.

Still it is no secret that the czarewitch does not care much about the throne, not on account of love affairs, but from observation of the continual excitement and terror in which his father lived. The suddenness of the crisis has served to intensify his aversion, yet nobody here believes he will execute his intention to renounce the throne.

I hear that preparations have been made to decrease the aversion of the czarewitch to succeed his father. It is stated that during the last three days he has signed all official documents, and that the czar has admonished him to attend to the advice of M. Bunge, president of the ministerial committee.

Princess Alix at Livadia.

Princess Alix arrived at Livadia last night. The czarina accompanied her to the chapel of the castle, where both prayed earnestly that the life of the czar be spared. The czarina looked careworn, but she walked without assistance. All the reports stating that her majesty has been stricken with paralysis are untrue.

The Berliner Tageblatt publishes a telegram from Livadia asserting that the betrothal of the czarewitch and Princess Alix will formally occur this evening, and the marriage take place tomorrow. This hastening of the ceremony is said to be rendered necessary by the rule of the Romanoff family compelling every heir apparent to marry before ascending the throne and to proclaim his successor.

On this account the proclamation of the nearest agnate, the Grand Duke Michael, as the ultimate heir apparent, is generally expected. Another rule in connection with the accession requires that when the oath of allegiance to the new czar is administered to the troops and officials an oath of fidelity to the heir apparent must be taken at the same time.

The Official Gazette announces that Princess Alix has arrived at Livadia, but does not publish a word about her marriage. From what I hear, no marriage is likely now, but there will be a formal betrothal, and the benediction of the czar under the circumstances will bind the princess and the czarewitch until the wedding ceremony takes place.

Has Less Appetite.

The bulletin issued last night by the physicians in attendance on the czar says: "His majesty slept five hours intermittently. He rose this morning as usual. His appetite has lessened. His strength has not increased."

The Standard's St. Petersburg correspondent telegraphs the following: Everybody is surprised that no mention is made of the pulse or temperature; in short, there is no clew as to what the disease from which the czar is suffering actually is. Medical men are unable to form any conjectures as to the possible issue. It is rumored that an operation is contemplated. Another story has it that the malady is expected to reach a crisis within the next day or two, but as to what the operation or malady are, even the best informed are ignorant.

The St. Petersburg correspondent of The Daily News says that private telegrams received Monday from Livadia confirm the official dispatches. They stated that the czar's mental faculties are somewhat more active, and that he seems to have gained confidence by his short walk in the castle garden.

The weather at Livadia is beautiful. All agree that much importance must not be attached to his majesty's temporary betterment. The doctors keep their patient out of bed as much as possible, first to maintain his moral energy and second on account of the weakness of his heart, which with long reclining becomes very dangerous.

Struck For the Old Scale.

NORTH ADAMS, Mass., Oct. 23.—The help in the Briggsville mill refused President Barker's offer of a restoration of 8 per cent and two hours and began a strike yesterday. The indications are that a compromise will be effected and that the help will return. About 200 hands are employed in the mill.

FOR GOOD CITIZENSHIP.

Lyceum League's Purpose Is to Train Young Men For Pure Politics.

BOSTON, Oct. 23.—The management of the Lyceum League of America was transferred last night from The Youth's Companion company to a directorate, of which Hon. Theodore Roosevelt is president. The Lyceum league is a national organization of young men who are training themselves for the duties of citizenship.

It is in some respects like an old-fashioned debating society, except that its discussions are confined to American political, economic and social questions, and much attention is given to local government reform. Its lyceums are scattered through all the states. It is non-partisan. In his inaugural address, President Roosevelt said:

"The prime purpose of the league is to cultivate good citizenship. In political life, whether a man acts without or within party lines, is not of very great moment, if only he acts honestly, fearlessly and effectively. Parties are necessary. But no man has a right to condone crime or to excuse moral shortcomings of any kind because of alleged party necessity. With the young American it rests to decide the failure or success of the tremendous experiment begun by Washington and carried on by Lincoln."

Advance Was Refused.

NEWBURYPORT, Mass., Oct. 23.—Yesterday the 100 cutters for the extensive shoe contractor, E. P. Dodge, notified the firm that they would strike if by 4 p. m. their new price-list, the minimum of which was $15 a week per man, was not acceded to. The firm declined, and the cutters quit work. This will cause a closing of the shops, depriving at least 500 persons of employment.

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., Oct. 23.—Another strike was begun at the Wamsutta mills yesterday. The wide loom weavers in No. 7 mill, about 50 in number, were requested to take another loom, making five looms for each weaver. The request was not complied with, the weavers leaving the mill in a body rather than take the extra work.

Many conductors who have been considered trusty men have been discharged, and many more removals are to follow. Employes are very much stirred up over the affair.

SALVATIONISTS' METHODS.

General Booth Declares That the End Justified the Means.

NEW YORK, Oct. 23.—The members of the Salvation Army gathered in Union square last evening, and after greeting the venerable General Booth, dispersed to reassemble in Carnegie Music hall, where an audience of 5000 greeted General Booth. The boxes were filled with fashionable men and women.

In the midst of a picturesque group on the stage the general was the striking and central figure. He was surrounded by his staff officers, the bands, and slum brigade. The background of this group was composed of the banners of the army, bearing such inscriptions as "Harlem for Jesus" and "The Bowery for our Lord."

Commander Booth led in prayer, and then the Rev. Dr. Bradford read an address of welcome to General Booth. The address was signed by Rev. Dr. Parkhurst, M. K. Jessup, W. E. Dodge, Dr. Hastings, D. J. Burrell, A. J. Palmer and others. As Dr. Parkhurst's name was mentioned, there was a round of applause.

Commander Booth then presented his father, the general, with a handsomely framed testimonial from the staff officers. General Booth made a speech, in which he briefly told the history of the army.

"Why did I undertake this work?" he asked. "Because in one part of the east end of London the population had never been inside a church. I drew the painted women from the street and the drunkards around me and preached the gospel of Jesus to them. Before them Christianity was a byword of reproach on their lips.

"People have questioned our mode of operations—the noise and banners—but I claim the end has justified the means. We have planted our banner on the walls of St. Petersburg and in distant India, and will push our fight to every corner of the earth."

Disastrous Underground Fire.

DENVER, Oct. 23.—A fire, caused by spontaneous combustion, in a hill above the town of Marshal, 30 years ago, threatens to communicate to the surrounding coal fields. Two weeks ago the miners were driven by smoke from the drift of the last coal mine that was workable.

THREE SCORE VICTIMS.

Soldier's Carelessness Caused an Awful Explosion at Rio De Janeiro.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 23.—Captain Hudgins of the coffee bark, Dom Pedro II, gives a graphic description of a dynamite explosion that occurred in Rio a few days before his vessel sailed for Baltimore.

A Brazilian soldier discovered near the English cemetery a subterranean magazine in which the insurgents of the recent rebellion had concealed a quantity of gunpowder, cartridges and dynamite shells. The soldier reported his find to the general commander, and a cart was sent to the scene to remove the contents.

A detachment of soldiers and a curious crowd of citizens followed it to the little hill. A quantity of shells had been placed in a pile and others had been passed out close behind it, when one of the soldiers, while in the act of handling a shell, dropped it among the others.

The same second an explosion shook the earth. A sheet of flame shot upward and a cloud of whitish smoke came into view. The vessels in the harbor rocked at their moorings, and the city was much excited. The soldiers and mules were blown into fragments, and only the iron tires of the cart wheels were found. Over 60 persons were reported killed.

STRIKE SITUATION GROWING SERIOUS IN FALL RIVER.

Power of Weavers' Union Has Been Shown and if the Mill Men Get Ugly They Will Shut Down the Mills.

It is very evident that times are growing serious in Fall River for the weavers are still running the strikers and some mill men said last night that they would not now give way to the strikers under any consideration, until they return to work, for the reason that they fear a continuation of present methods if they prove successful in this instance.

There are other manufacturers who, after seeing the power of the weavers, now contend that a great mistake was made in treating with the spinners on one basis and with the weavers on another and much lower one. These men believe that the only way out of the present muddle is to rectify the mistake as early as possible and preserve the old good feeling between employers and employes.

A SAD CASE

Thomas Briggs belongs in Stoneham but said he was working in Billerica and partook of some cider and got drunk. He told the court about a dozen times that if he was released he would sign the pledge. Briggs wanted to get out badly. He told Judge Hadley that "he wished to God he would release him, as he wanted to see his mother." The judge told him "he was a good talker but not a good worker." He was given 24 hours to leave the city.

Jennie McDermott was sent to jail for five months for drunkenness.

When Fred A. Weaver pleaded guilty to a charge of drunkenness, Judge Hadley remarked that "this was one of the hardest cases he had to deal with inasmuch as he is intimately acquainted with the young man's family, and has known the young man himself ever since childhood. His parents have given him every opportunity to do right, and he has enjoyed many advantages. But he has been ungrateful. He is a skilled workman and would make a good citizen only for drink." He told Officer Tuttle to talk with Weaver, and ascertain if he has the moral strength to stop drinking.

EDUCATIONAL ADVANTAGES

Emphasized by a Prominent Speaker at the Y. M. C. A.

The educational course at the Y.M.C.A., opened last night, with an address by Dr. Wm. Mowry of Hyde Park, supplemented by a short address by Supt. Whitcomb.

The attendance was large and the emphatic talk on the educational advantages offered young men by evening schools and special courses under auspices of organizations, was greatly appreciated.

Was it a Poisoning Case?

The story that there had been a poisoning case at a boarding house on the Suffolk corporation was denied by the lady of the house, yesterday afternoon. THE SUN had previously been informed of an alleged poisoning case, and since the denial has again been told that the victim was dying. If the case did happen somewhere in that vicinity, an effort was made to keep it quiet. It did not occur at the house named.

CURRENT POLITICAL GOSSIP.

HOW FOSS TRIES TO WORK FRENCH VOTERS.

The License Promises Will Never Be Fulfilled—A Prominent French Citizen Leaves Republican Party on Account of the A. P. A. Contingent.

Below is a communication from a French voter, a man of intelligence who has been a republican and abandons that party because of its alliance with the A. P. A. This is an example worthy of imitation by other French voters who, by supporting republicans may without knowing it be electing men endorsed by the A. P. A. and pledged to ostracise and disfranchise Catholics. It is unAmerican, undemocratic to raise a religious issue in politics or to discriminate against any man on account of his religion. Catholics do not do that because Archbishop Ireland, one of the greatest Catholic leaders of the country, advises them never to refuse to vote for a good candidate, because he happens to be a Protestant. But the religious issue has been forced upon Catholics by a lot of bigots and they must defend themselves by refusing to vote for their avowed and fanatical enemies.

To elevate the A. P. A. is to pave the way for the overthrow of constitutional liberty, to extinguish religious freedom and set up a religious or rather an irreligious test as a passport to official preferment. The subjoined letter from a prominent French citizen will be found of interest:

LOWELL, MASS., Oct. 25th, 1894.

Editor DAILY SUN:

Dear Sir—Will you be so kind as to allow me space in your paper to express my sentiments in regard to the French people and the A. P. A. Now, Mr. Editor, in one of your editorials in one of last week's papers you as much as said that the French people were in line with the A. P. A. on account of the Fremont meeting in Boston having a look of that kind. But I assure you, and the democrats of this city and elsewhere, that they have more to gain than lose by the A. P. A. antics. Now, I am a Frenchman and was always a republican, but having been a reader of your paper for the last two years I have read enough to satisfy me. I am a Catholic and I would not now vote a republican ticket for fear of voting for a man who is against my creed and put up by the A. P. A. So you see the good republicans are to blame for siding with the A. P. A. I know there is a good many French voters in the city who would express themselves in the same strain had they the courage to do so, but I have defended the French people in all caucuses. I have done so in this A. P. A. business to the best of my ability, and no French voter should support the party that has the A. P. A. in its ranks. Ask my friend Mr. Rourke of Ward one if I haven't been a republican, but am so no more. I remain yours truly,

ROCHAMBEAU.

P. S.—Our next governor is Mr. Greenhalge, congressman is Mr. Fifield, senator is Mr. Brady, representative, Ward One, Mr. Rourke.

Wm. F. Lyons of Kitson's machine shop is a candidate for the common council from Ward One.

Cornelius A. Daly, the Ward One druggist, is a candidate for the school committee in Ward One. He is a man of education and experience.

Thomas F. Garvey of the Cigarmakers' union who fought for Sen. Brady at the Central Labor union, Sunday, is a prominent candidate for the common council in Ward One. He has a large following and excellent chances of success.

It is reported that a couple of French republican ex-councilmen have been engaged working among the French voters in the interest of Foss. They have been promising liquor licenses through Mr. Foss's influence with the commission but as the commission allows nobody to promise anything on their account these gentlemen have been working a game of bluff. It is well that the voters, liquor dealers and others, should understand that all who make such promises are doing so without any authority and purely as a game of bluff. It is not likely that any French citizen will be deluded by such empty and delusive promises into supporting an A. P. A. candidate.

The populists had a rally in Jackson hall last evening. The audience was a small one and consisted partly of ladies.

The Morning Times has the following: "A republican member of the license commission rather puts a spoke in the wheel of the Foss managers when he says that no license promised in behalf of Foss to aid his campaign will, under any circumstances, be granted. That statement is likely to cause a cold chill in the 'back shop' phalanx."

Among the councilmanic candidates for the republican nomination in Alderman Lovejoy's ward is Burton A. Wiggin, a prominent young man and foreman for his father, Wm. H. Wiggin. The number of candidates cropping up in this ward promises a lively caucus.

Councilman O'Day is a candidate for renomination in Ward Six and he wants the voters to know how strongly he will favor their interests in the common council.

The French democrats organized on Sunday at the Clarendon hotel, the purpose being to promote registration and to work for the success of the democratic ticket. The French democrats are influenced as much by the A. P. A. movement as by any other cause in opposing candidates who sympathize with this proscriptive order.

Congressman O'Neill is to stump New York for David B. Hill. He is an able and convincing speaker.

Hon. George Fred Williams got a splendid reception in Lawrence last night. The democrats of Lowell would like to hear him. They were delighted with his pointed arguments and brilliant address last year.

The Lawrence Tribune says:

"Lawrence people will take peculiar pleasure in welcoming John E. Russell on the night of Nov 2, when he will speak at the Opera house. Lawrence was one of the seven Massachusetts cities that endorsed his principles by giving him a plurality last year. His lead over Greenhalge a year ago was 364. Lawrence ought to do a great deal better than that this year."

Good for Lawrence she stands unmoved in the face of every political storm, as firm in her democracy as the rock of Gibraltar. Would that Lowell followed her example.

Mayor Mathews of Boston announces that he is not a candidate for re-election. This is confirmed by a statement of Hon. James Donovan, chairman of the democratic city committee.

Elihu B. Hayes, Hon. William E. Barrett and Henry Cabot Lodge all on one platform. The lamb lies down inside the lion.

LOCAL NOTES.

The present is the last week of grace on water bill settlement.

Mr. Wm. Mack of May street is the happy father of a 10 pound boy.

Mrs. John Delmage of No. Billerica has returned from a visit to England.

There will be confirmation of 500 children at St. Michael's church tonight.

Next Sunday will be generally observed as Hospital Sunday in the local churches.

The Lowell and Lawrence high school foot ball teams will play on the Fair grounds tomorrow.

Saturday will be Lowell day at the Food fair in Boston, and Mrs. Julian Talbot will be one of the matrons.

There can be no reason why a water bill should remain unpaid after Saturday next. Liberal notice has been given.

Green sells sewing machines cheaper than any house in Lowell; cleans watches or replaces mainsprings. Springs for $1.00, all jewelry work in proportion, 88 Merrimack street.

Notwithstanding the abundant warning that all water bills must be paid the present week there will be a score or more come under the shut-off penalty on next Monday. Strange facts too.

The Emerald social club has organized with the following officers: M. J. Kennedy, president; E. Goodson, vice president; W. Tighe, recording secretary; T. Smith, financial secretary; J. Mitchell, treasurer.

Big Wrestling Match.

Harry Watson and R. M. Yarnold called at THE SUN office last evening and stated that they had signed an agreement to wrestle at collar and elbow, best two falls in three, on some date to be mutually agreed upon, but not later than November 17.

The match is for $200 a side and Watson has the privilege of naming the hall in which it will take place.

Yarnold agrees to throw Watson twice in twenty minutes or forfeit the stakes.

The men met nine years ago before the Fairfield club in Vermont, and the match was declared a draw after the men had wrestled one hour and each had secured one fall. The purse was divided.

Watson had his leg injured six weeks ago but has fully recovered.

Firemen to Practice Bowling.

Soon the sound of falling pins will be heard in the subterranean parts of the Palmer street engine house, for in the basement two bowling alleys are being built. This is a good move and the first step towards a "gym" for the department. The work is being done by the permanent firemen in the house after getting permission to put them in and to make over the basement. The firemen also settle expenses so that useless space in the cellar is being finely utilized at no expense to the city and to the equal benefit of the firemen and the city property. Ed. Morse and Henry Farrell are keeping an eye on the work. The alleys will be of regulation size and finely equipped.

A Historic Lot of Dirt.

E. P. Woods took into the water board office yesterday a glass bottle containing a small portion of the first shovelfull of earth dug on the ground where the old reservoir is located by Mayor J. P. Folsom in 1870, and William Kittredge wheeled the first barrowful of earth.

Lizzie Borden's Pastor.

Rev. Mr. Judd who preached at the Kirk street church last Sunday, is Miss Borden's pastor, in Fall River. He preached a fine sermon and was cordially received by the Kirk street people.

This line of Boys' Waists is recognized as the best, and justly so. Its great advantage over all other waists is it's detachable waistband, which makes it invaluable when the waist reaches the washtub. McKINLEYISM
TRYING TO RESURRECT A THING THE PEOPLE DONT WANT MONOPOLIES
TRUSTS

THE CUARDIAN ANCEL OF TRUSTS AND MONOPOLIES.

THEY GRANTED TWO PETITIONS

ALDERMEN QUICKLY SETTLE THE STREET RAILWAY QUESTION.

Restrictions Given Out With the Permits Which Will Make Both Companies Contribute to the City's Welfare.

After two lengthy hearings and several hours deliberation the mayor and aldermen last evening voted unanimously to grant to the Lowell, Lawrence and Haverhill, and the Lowell & Suburban Street Railway companies, the locations asked by them on First street. And all this, in spite of the remonstrance of 300 citizens represented by Fred'k Lawton, Esq., and the noble fight for his rights single handed by Major Lowell, a member of the syndicate of which Alderman Lovejoy is a member, and which owns 70 acres of land on the line of the proposed route. The opposition of the Locks and Canals company did not amount to much.

President Campbell of the Lowell, Lawrence & Haverhill company, witnessed the triumph of his company's efforts to gain admittance to this city and Percy Parker, treasurer of the local company seemed pleased when he saw eight aldermen vote in favor of his petition.

Squire Qua seemed placid when the decision of the board was announced, and young Lawyer Richardson hustled home to convey the news to his learned and respected "pa." Yesterday's meeting of the aldermen was one that adjourned over from last Thursday evening. It was called at 4 o'clock and the members were on time. So were representatives of the interested parties.

The mayor summoned the aldermen to his reception room. Col. Francis and the engineer of the Locks and Canals company were consulted, and the aldermen also heard President Campbell and Counsel Qua of the Lowell, Lawrence & Haverhill company.

The executive session lasted till 5.45, then the meeting resumed.

It was evident that some decision had been reached. Mayor Pickman called to order and looked at Alderman Westall who returned the glance. Then his honor gazed inquiringly at Alderman Lovejoy who wants to be mayor. The alderman from the fifth smiled at Westall and then said: "Mr. Mayor, I understand that there are some legal papers to be drawn up so

"For how long," inquired Alderman C. Johnson in an undertone.

"Never mind stating that" replied the mayor, and the motion passed.

At 6 o'clock the board again went into executive session in the mayor's reception room, presumably to prepare a resolution and agree upon conditions to go with the resolution granting the company's petition.

It was 7.25 when they again went into open meeting.

After Mayor Pickman called to order the following petitions were referred: of Capt. L. C. Prouty for a landing place for boats on the upper Merrimack river; of James Flaherty, for a street light on 1 street; of John Ryan for an electric light at the corner of Westford and Pine streets; of C. I. Hood, protesting against the location of a pole at the corner of Eliot and Middlesex streets.

Notice was received from the county commissioners that a hearing will be held next month on the petition to widen Gorham street.

A resolution introduced by Alderman Stanley was then passed unanimously granting a location of tracks on First street to the L. & H. Railway Co., as petitioned for by them.

A resolution was also passed granting a location of tracks on First street to the Lowell & Suburban company as petitioned for.

The Lowell and Suburban company was also granted the right to lay a single track in Rogers street to the Tewksbury line. Their petition to relocate tracks from East Merrimack and Hoyt street to the junction of Nesmith and Wyman streets was refused.

An order was adopted approving the location granted the L. L. & H. company over private land in the city.

The agreement signed by the companies in return for the locations granted them, provides that all poles shall be of a height and color acceptable to the mayor and aldermen; gives the firemen in case of fire permission to cut wires or order a current discontinued, the same to be repaired at the expense of the companies; binds them to pave between the tracks and 18 inches on each side of them and to keep the road on First street, in which the tracks are laid free from snow and ice, in the winter time.

The agreement with the L. L. & H. company further provides that the company that shall build a way 50 feet wide along their route and make the same fit for travel. They shall not oppose laying it out as a public way, and also agree to pay all damages arising from such laying out.

Shortly after 8 o'clock the board adjourned to the Merrimack house, and dined. After that the members attended the performance of "Faust" at the Opera house.

EVENING SCHOOLS ARE OPEN.

ATTENDANCE FALLS FAR BELOW POINT REACHED LAST YEAR.

In the High School the Average Age of Pupils is Higher Than Before While at all Schools the Prospects are good for Greater Interest on the Part of Those Attending.

The free evening schools of the city opened last evening for the winter term. The opening was not so encouraging or auspicious, in point of attendance of pupils, as last year. Every evening last week, the schools were opened for registration of pupils, and the reports from the different schools are not so gratifying as might be expected.

Registration for the different schools was as follows:

High, 742; Green, 350; Bartlett, 201; Aiken Avenue, 102; Mann and Worthen Street, 184; High Street, 20; Butler, 85; Franklin, 101; Edson, 108; Varnum, 108; Colburn, 1—; total, 2,162. Supervisor Smith says that the total registration is about 500 below last year's attendance, and unless there is a marked increase during the week some of the rooms will be closed, and a number of teachers dropped.

At the schools about all who were registered reported and received their first instruction of the term. In the Worthen street school there are about 80 Portuguese and Armenian pupils endeavoring to master the English language.

At the Green school the register contained about 150 names less than there were pupils in the school last year. There was a falling off in the Butler school where only 85 pupils had made application and twelve temporary teachers were in attendance. A somewhat similar condition of affairs existed in the Varnum school.

The high school was crowded, the attendance being considerably larger than last year, and in fact larger than any previous year, with the prospect of increasing before the end of the week. One gratifying thing here is that the pupils are older in years and seem to be more intent on their object of attending school.

Over in the Colburn school, there is a class of Armenians taught by one of their own nationality. The Edson school remains about the same as last year, in point of numbers, there being already 108 pupils for the six teachers.

The drawing and modelling classes in the Mann school, were well patronized, and will undoubtedly increase its membership, as it has done in previous years.

The teachers who were in charge of the schools last evening have been placed there temporarily and are subject to confirmation or rejection by the school board at its next meeting. It may be that some of them will be dropped unless the attendance picks up considerably.

This year's graduates of the training school have been given preference in the matter of filling vacancies in the corps of teachers.

It is expected that the committee on evening schools will pay an official visit to the schools shortly.

STILL FOR MUNICIPAL REFORM

MORE IDEAS ADVANCED BY THE BOARD OF TRADE.

Final Action Has Been Postponed Until the Regular Meeting Next Month—The Opinion is Divided.

The special meeting of the board of trade held last evening for the purpose of discussing municipal taxation and expenditure attracted a fair attendance. The resolution introduced by the committee was as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this board that the supervision of roads, bridges sewers and commons, including the employment and direction of subordinates, the selection of material and all the powers and duties that are now associated with such supervision should be lodged with the city engineer, whose term of office should be extended to three or five years.

President Hanscom read a letter from Mr. Sullivan L. Ward in which he commended the board for its action in the matter and advised selecting councilmen without regard to party, race or creed.

Mr. C. H. Coburn said his policy was "spend thriftily and pay as you go." The appropriations should be large enough to meet all expenses without any regard to the tax rate and borrowing and "piecing out" should be avoided. The mayor should have more power and changes should be made in the two branches. To sum up he said the city was suffering from over-taxation complicated with enlarged expenditures, and a strong decoction of new charter is the remedy needed.

Mr. C. E. Adams favored the New York committee of 70 idea.

L. J. Smith did not fully favor the resolution, but he thought several departments should be put under one administrative board. Men have been elected to office because they were labeled "democrat" and "republican," not having ever made a study of municipal government. He was a democrat but could see no democratic politics in the city government.

Councilman Tryder thought the heads of departments had too much power. He couldn't see where a councilman cost the city $10,000 each.

John F. Murphy wanted to amend the resolution striking out "city engineer" and inserting "board of public works."

W. H. Parker suggested calling a mass meeting to appoint a committee of 70 or 100 to make up a ticket of capable men.

LATEST

FOR MANSLAUGHTER WILLIARD REED IS SENTENCED.

He Took the Sentence Calmly and the Light Sentence Created Considerable Surprise.

Willard T. Reed of Graniteville, who pleaded guilty to manslaughter, was sentenced to one year in the house of correction at hard labor.

When Superior court came in this morning much delay was caused by the absence of counsel of prisoners. Judge Fessenden said that hereafter cases which are delayed by counsel would be transferred to the Cambridge list for trial.

The case of George Robinson for receiving stolen property was changed to the Cambridge list as his counsel, Hon. Jere. Crowley is in the south.

In the Morton case Inspectors Allen and Lafamme testified that the defendant had admitted to them that he took $85 from the safe and went to Boston, where he bought a watch and bicycle suit, afterwards going to his home in Pittsfield where he was arrested. He wore the bicycle suit at the trial, having been in jail since his arrest.

Judge Fessenden asked Morton if he had anything to say, and Morton attempted to speak, but finally burst out crying. He finally composed himself and informed the court that he had nothing to say to the charge. The jury retired and returned in a short time with a verdict of guilty.

The case of Catharine Connors of Fox yard who is well known in police circles for alleged larceny of $1.50 from Catharine White was taken up. Catharine was convicted in the lower court and she appealed. The facts of the case were reported in the police court record at the time.

Lawyer Fay appeared for the defendant.

The White woman left $1.50 on her bed one day in September and the Connors woman came in and as she alleged purloined the money. Three witnesses were called and gave the same testimony as in the lower court. When the government's case had been finished, the case of who killed his brother in Graniteville, was taken up for sentence, to accommodate Lawyer Morrison, Reed's attorney who wished to get away.

Willard T. Reed,

District Attorney Weir explained the circumstances of the case as have been reported, putting in Reed's remark that he had not killed his brother, the latter would have killed him. At the time he fired the shot Charles was reaching for a gun. A gun was found nearby. But, the district attorney said if Charles had been reaching for the gun, it would have been impossible for him to receive the wound which he did. This was the opinion of the doctors at the autopsy. The trouble arose over Willard's refusal to go to work at Charles' request. Charles, Willard said had threatened to shoot him if he didn't go to work. The district attorney said there was evidence that Willard had also threatened the life of Charles as the latter beat him terribly some time before. Charles was much larger and more quarrelsome and the district attorney had some doubt that if he had pleaded not guilty a jury would convict him on that complaint.

Hon. J. H. Morrison, for the defendant said that he was satisfied that outside of the dispute, regarding the position of the wound, he felt certain that no jury would convict him. Charles had said "D— you if you don't come down, I will kill you," according to Willard's statement. Charles came up with a shot gun in his hands and as Willard had no chance to escape he shot him. Willard also said that he took the gun out of his brother's hands and put it against the wall. Mr. Morrison honestly believed that Willard was justified in shooting Charles, and he said that the towns-people were surprised to hear that Charles had been killed, but would not have been surprised had Charles killed Willard.

Judge Fessenden said there are cases where taking a life may be justifiable, but it seems to be that the measures taken by the defendant in this case were unreasonable as death was the result.

Reed was sentenced to the house of correction for the term of one year.

The Connors case was then resumed and Lawyer Fay put on the defendant and two others. Arguments were made and the case was given to the jury shortly before adjournment.

GIVEN TWO YEARS IN PRISON.

MORE SENTENCES BY THE HIGH COURT TODAY.

Judge Fessenden Not Slow in Acting When the Jury Returns a Verdict On the Several Cases.

At the beginning of the afternoon session the case of Geo. Howard of Dracut was tried. Howard was charged in the indictment with larceny of a horse from Thomas F. Fay in August, 1894, while the theft occurred in 1893. The mistake was rectified having been noticed first by the defendant.

Thomas F. Fay testified that the defendant formerly worked for him, after leaving his employ, he, with other men, camped out in Dracut and his horse was placed in pasture near them. The horse was stolen. Joseph L. Cleveland of Salem, N. H., saw the defendant with the stolen horse. Officer Scott of Dracut and Jos. Fay also testified.

For the defence Howard said he never had anything to do with the theft. He was away with Main's circus and was arrested in Chelsea.

The jury in the case of Patrick H. Shea charged with breaking and entering and larceny from a freight car returned a verdict of guilty of larceny and he was sentenced to the Mass. reformatory.

Henry Butlaw, his companion who is from Willimantic, Conn., was sentenced to the house of correction for one year.

T. J. Robinson pleaded guilty to the charge of breaking and entering Anderson's grocery store on Market street. He was sentenced to the Concord reformatory.

Thomas Rooney, who escaped from the Lowell jail, pleaded guilty. Rooney belongs in Stoneham and was serving a sentence of three months for drunkenness. He had been in 26 days when he escaped. He had a wife and six children, all of whom are too young to work and when he escaped, he intended to return but wished to make some money for his family before returning. He was sent back to serve out his sentence and was given three months in the house of correction besides.

John Hayes pleaded guilty to the charge of larceny of $150 worth of goods from a building on Eliot street, and hid them. Some one else found them. Hayes served two years for breaking and entering some [illegible] years ago and had served time for drunkenness. He was sentenced to the house of correction for two years.

Before court adjourned the jury in the case of George Howard returned a verdict of guilty.

For Governor:

HON. JOHN E. RUSSELL of Leicester.

HON. GEO. W. FIFIELD of Lowell.

For Senator:

HON. PETER J. BRADY of Lowell.

QUEEN ALIX deserves a crown.

KNOX WILL be heard in self defence tonight.

THE REPUBLICANS will have a calamity gathering at Huntington hall tonight.

IT LOOKS as if the county ring were about to become famous. What hath Sheriff Cushing to say?

E. W. RODGERS does not seem to be very much afraid of getting into jail since he tackles the county sheriff.

THE EVENING schools have started up. Manual training is being neglected because of the dead lock in the board.

WILL THE board of trade please devise means of reducing the city's interest account? That will secure all the economic reforms needed.

MAYOR MATHEWS is revealing a queer state of affairs in the finances of Boston. This is the result of minority representation and state control.

PETER A. FAY is getting out a lot of circulars exposing the administration of the county ring. He will stir up the taxpayers to a sense of duty.

THE FIRST Chinese victory is reported from Chinese sources. The Celestial troops must have gotten into a fortification from which there was no escape.

MR. FOSS dicovers that the license commission will not redeem his promises and he cannot fulfill them himself. What a pickle. Goodness gracious "what's to be did?"

REV. HUGH MONTGOMERY denies the accuracy of the A. P. A. expose published in the Boston Post last Friday. He must know the oaths of this dark lantern order when he is able to say what they are not.

THE BOARD OF TRADE is pushing forward in its proposed mission of municipal reform. The plan to put the management of streets, sewers and commons in the hands of the city engineer is not considered a wise one; it is not favored by the tax payers to any extent and some go so far as to say it is all a scheme to benefit certain land owners in Ward Four. It would be better by far to place the necessary power in the hands of the chief executive to see that the work of these departments be carried out effectively. Had the mayor the power to suspend or remove heads of departments for mismanagement or incompetency the whole problem would be solved.

STAMP OUT HOODLUMISM.

The death of Patrick Buckley as a result of injuries sustained in being struck by a missile thrown by a desperado should be a lesson to the police.

It is high time that more active steps were taken to restrain hoodlumism. It is not uncommon to find a number of toughs parading the streets at night, swearing among themselves and at passers by, throwing stones at inoffensive people, attacking women and children and in a thousand ways making themselves a pest to the community.

The police have not dealt with the hoodlums as they should have done. It is time that Chief Davis would change his policy in regard the element that pervades streets and alleys at night ready to commit any kind of depredation or assault. They have been tolerated too long and Buckley's death is an object lesson that should arouse the police to a sense of their duty in the matter. It is reported by an eye witness that an officer was asked to arrest one of the stone throwers while within his reach but instead of doing so he stood still as if afraid to move or unwilling to risk the ordeal. Was it cowardice or stupidity that pinned the officer to the ground when he should have made an effort to catch the man who had attempted to kill another with a missile? This question interests the public because an officer that lets such occurrences take place under his very eye is not the kind of a man who will check hoodlumism.

THE CENTRAL Labor Union has endorsed Hon. Peter J. Brady for senator. Judging from his record in the legislature one might suppose the vote would be unanimous because he lost no opportunity of advancing every labor measure as far as lay in his power. To support a populist candidate would be the height of ingratitude as well as a direct blow at the interests of labor because there is no hope of electing any populist candidate. Mr. Connolly, Mr. Weeks and other men identified with the populist party are in full sympathy with organized labor. In fact they spend much of their time working in its behalf; but if they were a thousand times more valuable, a vote given to either would be thrown away so far as the chance of electing either candidate is concerned. While the contest between Brady and Foss will be very close a small number of votes taken from Brady or from the democratic strength and given to a third party candidate will be just so much in Foss's favor.

THE DEMOCRATS of the Fifth district are confident of electing Mr. Fifield to congress. They like his democracy, they like his record as an employer of labor and they like his tariff policy which is to let it alone for the present. Many republicans have the same sentiment in regard to Mr. Fifield's candidacy so that the prospect of a solid majority is very encouraging.

A TYPHOID epidemic on. Is this from the contamination of Hale's brook, from the Merrimack river water, or from bad vaults? Will the board of health or the water board please answer?

THE MCKINLEY croakers complain about a reduction in prices of the necessaries of life. The cost of living has come down and will be lower still. That is a benefit to the people.

COLD THAT BURNS.

Its Effects Are Not Very Different From Scorching by Heat.

Burning is usually associated with heat, and it seems a misnomer to speak of cold burns. Chemists tell us that there is really no such thing as cold, which is relative heat, and that the lowest temperature yet registered is some degrees above absolute cold.

At a meeting of the Swiss Society of Natural Sciences at Lausanne M. Raoul Pictet gave some particulars concerning cold burns experienced by himself and assistants during his investigations of the lowest temperature attainable. There are two degrees of burns. In one case the skin reddens at first and turns blue the following day, and subsequently the area of the spot expands until it becomes nearly double its original dimensions. The "burn," which is usually not healed until five or six weeks after its occurrence, is accompanied by a very painful itching on the affected spot and the surrounding tissues. When the burning is more serious, produced by longer contact with the cold body, a burn of the second degree is experienced. In this case the skin is rapidly detached, and all parts reached by the cold behave like foreign bodies. A long and stubborn suppuration sets in, which does not seem to accelerate the reconstitution of the tissues. The wounds are malignant and scar very slowly in a manner entirely different from burns produced by fire.

On one occasion, when M. Pictet was suffering from a severe burn due to a drop of liquid air, he accidentally scorched the same hand very seriously. The scorched portion was healed in 10 or 12 days, but the wound produced by the cold burn was open for upward of six months. In order to try the effect of radiation in dry cold air M. Pictet held his bare arm up to the elbow in a refrigerating vessel maintained at 105 degrees, when a sensation of a peculiarly distinct character was felt over the whole skin and throughout the muscles. At first this sensation was not disagreeable, but gradually it became decidedly so, and after three or four minutes the skin turned blue, and the pain became more intense and deep seated. On withdrawing the arm from the refrigerator at the end of ten minutes a strong reaction was experienced, accompanied by a superficial inflammation of the skin.—Newcastle Chronicle.

The Safer Way.

Colonel Corkscrieugh was a dignified citizen, with a blooming red nose, and while he had his weaknesses he was held to be scrupulously honest. One day a business man called him into his office.

"Colonel," he said, "I want to leave a valuable package with you for a week or so."

"Very good, sir," replied the colonel. "Where is it?"

"It's here in my desk. I want to say to you that it is a gallon of whisky. Are you to be trusted with it?"

The colonel's face flushed.

"My honor's at stake, sir," he returned haughtily.

The colonel's eyes shone.

The man took the demijohn out, and the colonel inspected it carefully and satisfied himself that it was as represented. Then he set it down on the floor.

"Excuse me, sir," he said slowly, "but I think you had better store that in the vault of the safe deposit company."—Detroit Free Press.

It is a village on a Bengalese highway, a village of 30 or 40 huts strung out in line, with the jungle for a background and the wretched dwellings almost hidden from sight by a row of trees along the road. It is high noon now, and as we rest under a tree and look into the village a procession of people comes toward us. It is not a funeral procession, not a march, not a band going out to work or worship. It is the flight of 200 panic stricken men, women and children. Each one bears a burden, and each one looks around in apprehension and increases his pace as the village is left behind. Are they flying from fever or cholera or dread of a jungle fire which may surround them? Have they heard that a band of robbers is lurking in the tangled forest beyond their patty fields, waiting for night to come to descend upon the village and rob the people even of their ragged loin-clothes? Is there danger that a storm away up in the hills will overflow the ditches and drown out the village?

No, it is nothing they fear, and yet it is something they fear worse than death itself. Only an hour ago a native runner entered the village, pale and breathless, to announce that a man eating tiger had taken up his quarters on the highway between that and the village five miles to the north. It is not fear, but apprehension, a nervous terror, a feeling of helplessness, which has sent them flying. Where to? No one knows nor cares nor has considered that question. The idea is to be miles away before the sun goes down and the man eater is ready to go in search of his evening meal. He may seek it in that village, in the other, in one a dozen miles away. The man eater may crouch in one spot for hours, waiting for a victim to pass, or he may roam the country over from dark to dawn. It is not this village alone. The people are flying from four others in the same panic stricken manner. Seven hundred men, women and children leaving home behind, 1,000 acres of crops left to ripen and rot, because a man eater is abroad, and no one knows who will be his next victim, although the Bengalese believe that one's days are numbered, and that death must come when the mark has been reached. An hour after the flight the vultures and hyenas are fighting over the spoils left behind.

The sun hastens into the west, sinks lower and lower, and by and by the red ball of fire drops out of sight, and darkness comes. There is no twilight, no gloaming. Five minutes ago it was daylight. Now it is night. Two miles to the north a nullah or creek comes down from the east and crosses the highway. It flows in the bed of a ravine choked with bush and brier and plant and creeper, and there is so little water that there is no bridge over the highway. Once over the highway it flows into another ravine, equally dark and gloomy, and 100 miles away its waters find a great river. At the first notes of the night birds the man eater is aroused. His lair is a mile from the highway and in a tangle so thick that men might have looked for him in vain. He wakes from his deep sleep with dry lips and parched tongue, and he whines and complains as he creeps down to the brook and searches for a pool into which to plunge his head until it is almost immersed. He drinks long and deep, like a horse which has traversed the desert from dawn to dark. When his thirst is at last satisfied, he stretches himself, growls his satisfaction and turns and faces down the ravine. There is nothing left of the man he killed the night before. What he did not eat the jackals were waiting to devour. He is hungry again, and he must kill to live.

With a footfall as soft as that of a rabbit, though betraying his presence every minute or two by an angry snarl at bush or rock or gliding serpent, the man eater makes his way down the ravine. At the highway, before he breaks cover, he listens to the north and the south to learn if anything is moving. There is no one to see him, nothing to disturb him, and with a couple of bounds and a catlike hiss he is across the road and hidden in bushes beyond. He turns as he enters the bushes and faces the road and his lair. It is the craft of the man eater to do this, to face in the direction he means to drag his victim. An hour goes by. Two hours slip away. The people have been warned, and not a human being has traveled this road since the sun was within an hour of setting. The man eater has settled himself down with many a complaining growl and whine, but not to sleep while he waits. His ears work nervously, and his eyes blaze, and his tail quivers as he bides his time.

A belated villager, who has been to a distant market, with his produce loaded on the back of a patient, lumbering ox—he has not heard of the man eater, of the flight of his family and friends. He rides the ox as he returns. He fears there may be a tiger or panther lurking along the highway, and when not absolutely quiet he is whispering prayers for protection. The tiger hears the step of the ox a long way off. His keen sighted eyes tell him in the darkness what is approaching. The ox advances with a plod, plod, plod, looking furtively to right and left at intervals, but scenting no danger. He comes to the creek, swallows the cud he has been chewing as he plodded along and lowers his head to drink. As suddenly as the report of a gun reaches one's ears, he hears an angry roar, feels sharp claws pricking his flesh, and as he rushes up the road through the darkness he is alone. The tiger's spring was not for him. Before the ox has galloped a mile the man eater has dragged his victim half way up the ravine to the spot where we found him as the sun went down. He will feast again tonight and sleep away the morrow.

Painted Arab Girls.

Shief is a very picturesque spot perched on a rock, with towers and turrets constructed of sun-dried brick, only here, as elsewhere in these valleys, the houses are so exactly the same color as the rock behind them that they lose their effect. The rich have evidently recognized this difficulty and whitewash their houses, but in the poorer villages there is no whitewash, and consequently nothing to make them stand out from their surroundings. Arab girls before they enter the harem and take the veil are a curious sight to behold. Their bodies and faces are dyed a bright yellow with turmeric. On this ground they paint black lines with antimony over their eyes. The fashionable color for the nose is red, green spots adorn the cheek, and the general aspect is grotesque beyond description.

It is the universal female dress in Hadramut and looks as if the fashion had not changed since the days when Hazarmaveth, the patriarch, settled in this valley and gave it his name (Genesis x, 26). The tall, tapering straw hat worn by these women when in the fields contributes with the mask to make the Hadrami females as externally repulsive as the most jealous of husbands could desire.—Nineteenth Century.

Painted Like a Ruffian.

Caravaggio was originally a hod carrier and was afterward employed by the painters in the Vatican to grind their colors. He was fond of depicting scenes in low life, and it was said of him that he painted like a ruffian because he was a ruffian. His "Entombment of Christ," in the Vatican, was modeled on the funeral of a gypsy chief.—Exchange.

For Governor:

HON. JOHN E. RUSSELL of Leicester.

HON. GEO. W. FIFIELD of Lowell.

For Senator:

HON. PETER J. BRADY of Lowell.

QUEEN ALIX deserves a crown.

KNOX WILL be heard in self defence tonight.

THE REPUBLICANS will have a calamity gathering at Huntington hall tonight.

IT LOOKS as if the county ring were about to become famous. What hath Sheriff Cushing to say?

E. W. RODGERS does not seem to be very much afraid of getting into jail since he tackles the county sheriff.

THE EVENING schools have started up. Manual training is being neglected because of the dead lock in the board.

WILL THE board of trade please devise means of reducing the city's interest account? That will secure all the economic reforms needed.

MAYOR MATHEWS is revealing a queer state of affairs in the finances of Boston. This is the result of minority representation and state control.

PETER A. FAY is getting out a lot of circulars exposing the administration of the county ring. He will stir up the taxpayers to a sense of duty.

THE FIRST Chinese victory is reported from Chinese sources. The Celestial troops must have gotten into a fortification from which there was no escape.

MR. FOSS dicovers that the license commission will not redeem his promises and he cannot fulfill them himself. What a pickle. Goodness gracious "what's to be did?"

REV. HUGH MONTGOMERY denies the accuracy of the A. P. A. expose published in the Boston Post last Friday. He must know the oaths of this dark lantern order when he is able to say what they are not.

THE BOARD OF TRADE is pushing forward in its proposed mission of municipal reform. The plan to put the management of streets, sewers and commons in the hands of the city engineer is not considered a wise one; it is not favored by the tax payers to any extent and some go so far as to say it is all a scheme to benefit certain land owners in Ward Four. It would be better by far to place the necessary power in the hands of the chief executive to see that the work of these departments be carried out effectively. Had the mayor the power to suspend or remove heads of departments for mismanagement or incompetency the whole problem would be solved.

STAMP OUT HOODLUMISM.

The death of Patrick Buckley as a result of injuries sustained in being struck by a missile thrown by a desperado should be a lesson to the police.

It is high time that more active steps were taken to restrain hoodlumism. It is not uncommon to find a number of toughs parading the streets at night, swearing among themselves and at passers by, throwing stones at inoffensive people, attacking women and children and in a thousand ways making themselves a pest to the community.

The police have not dealt with the hoodlums as they should have done. It is time that Chief Davis would change his policy in regard the element that pervades streets and alleys at night ready to commit any kind of depredation or assault. They have been tolerated too long and Buckley's death is an object lesson that should arouse the police to a sense of their duty in the matter. It is reported by an eye witness that an officer was asked to arrest one of the stone throwers while within his reach but instead of doing so he stood still as if afraid to move or unwilling to risk the ordeal. Was it cowardice or stupidity that pinned the officer to the ground when he should have made an effort to catch the man who had attempted to kill another with a missile? This question interests the public because an officer that lets such occurrences take place under his very eye is not the kind of a man who will check hoodlumism.

THE CENTRAL Labor Union has endorsed Hon. Peter J. Brady for senator. Judging from his record in the legislature one might suppose the vote would be unanimous because he lost no opportunity of advancing every labor measure as far as lay in his power. To support a populist candidate would be the height of ingratitude as well as a direct blow at the interests of labor because there is no hope of electing any populist candidate. Mr. Connolly, Mr. Weeks and other men identified with the populist party are in full sympathy with organized labor. In fact they spend much of their time working in its behalf; but if they were a thousand times more valuable, a vote given to either would be thrown away so far as the chance of electing either candidate is concerned. While the contest between Brady and Foss will be very close a small number of votes taken from Brady or from the democratic strength and given to a third party candidate will be just so much in Foss's favor.

THE DEMOCRATS of the Fifth district are confident of electing Mr. Fifield to congress. They like his democracy, they like his record as an employer of labor and they like his tariff policy which is to let it alone for the present. Many republicans have the same sentiment in regard to Mr. Fifield's candidacy so that the prospect of a solid majority is very encouraging.

A TYPHOID epidemic on. Is this from the contamination of Hale's brook, from the Merrimack river water, or from bad vaults? Will the board of health or the water board please answer?

THE MCKINLEY croakers complain about a reduction in prices of the necessaries of life. The cost of living has come down and will be lower still. That is a benefit to the people.

COLD THAT BURNS.

Its Effects Are Not Very Different From Scorching by Heat.

Burning is usually associated with heat, and it seems a misnomer to speak of cold burns. Chemists tell us that there is really no such thing as cold, which is relative heat, and that the lowest temperature yet registered is some degrees above absolute cold.

At a meeting of the Swiss Society of Natural Sciences at Lausanne M. Raoul Pictet gave some particulars concerning cold burns experienced by himself and assistants during his investigations of the lowest temperature attainable. There are two degrees of burns. In one case the skin reddens at first and turns blue the following day, and subsequently the area of the spot expands until it becomes nearly double its original dimensions. The "burn," which is usually not healed until five or six weeks after its occurrence, is accompanied by a very painful itching on the affected spot and the surrounding tissues. When the burning is more serious, produced by longer contact with the cold body, a burn of the second degree is experienced. In this case the skin is rapidly detached, and all parts reached by the cold behave like foreign bodies. A long and stubborn suppuration sets in, which does not seem to accelerate the reconstitution of the tissues. The wounds are malignant and scar very slowly in a manner entirely different from burns produced by fire.

On one occasion, when M. Pictet was suffering from a severe burn due to a drop of liquid air, he accidentally scorched the same hand very seriously. The scorched portion was healed in 10 or 12 days, but the wound produced by the cold burn was open for upward of six months. In order to try the effect of radiation in dry cold air M. Pictet held his bare arm up to the elbow in a refrigerating vessel maintained at 105 degrees, when a sensation of a peculiarly distinct character was felt over the whole skin and throughout the muscles. At first this sensation was not disagreeable, but gradually it became decidedly so, and after three or four minutes the skin turned blue, and the pain became more intense and deep seated. On withdrawing the arm from the refrigerator at the end of ten minutes a strong reaction was experienced, accompanied by a superficial inflammation of the skin.—Newcastle Chronicle.

The Safer Way.

Colonel Corkseriough was a dignified citizen, with a blooming red nose, and while he had his weaknesses he was held to be scrupulously honest. One day a business man called him into his office.

"Colonel," he said, "I want to leave a valuable package with you for a week or so."

"Very good, sir," replied the colonel. "Where is it?"

"It's here in my desk. I want to say to you that it is a gallon of whisky. Are you to be trusted with it?"

The colonel's face flushed.

"My honor's at stake, sir," he returned haughtily.

The colonel's eyes shone.

The man took the demijohn out, and the colonel inspected it carefully and satisfied himself that it was as represented. Then he set it down on the floor.

"Excuse me, sir," he said slowly, "but I think you had better store that in the vault of the safe deposit company."—Detroit Free Press.

Nervous or General Debility, Dizziness, Faintness, Displacement, Internal Inflammation and Ulceration, Bearing - down Pains, and all womanly weaknesses or ailments are cured by the "Prescription."

Abita Springs, La.

DR. R. V. PIERCE: Dear Sir—My wife suffered from laceration of the womb and inflammation—she was completely bed-ridden and lingered about one year at death's door. Local applications were given her and Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription; she gradually regained strength and continued to do so until she recovered. I am convinced that any case of womb disease can be certainly and permanently cured by the use of your remedies.

THE MAN EATER.

It is a village on a Bengalese highway, a village of 30 or 40 huts strung out in line, with the jungle for a background and the wretched dwellings almost hidden from sight by a row of trees along the road. It is high noon now, and as we rest under a tree and look into the village a procession of people comes toward us. It is not a funeral procession, not a march, not a band going out to work or worship. It is the flight of 200 panic stricken men, women and children. Each one bears a burden, and each one looks around in apprehension and increases his pace as the village is left behind. Are they flying from fever or cholera or dread of a jungle fire which may surround them? Have they heard that a band of robbers is lurking in the tangled forest beyond their patty fields, waiting for night to come to descend upon the village and rob the people even of their ragged loin clothes? Is there danger that a storm away up in the hills will overflow the ditches and drown out the village?

No, it is nothing they fear, and yet it is something they fear worse than death itself. Only an hour ago a native runner entered the village, pale and breathless, to announce that a man eating tiger had taken up his quarters on the highway between that and the village five miles to the north. It is not fear, but apprehension, a nervous terror, a feeling of helplessness, which has sent them flying. Where to? No one knows nor cares nor has considered that question. The idea is to be miles away before the sun goes down and the man eater is ready to go in search of his evening meal. He may seek it in that village, in the other, in one a dozen miles away. The man eater may crouch in one spot for hours, waiting for a victim to pass, or he may roam the country over from dark to dawn. It is not this village alone. The people are flying from four others in the same panic stricken manner. Seven hundred men, women and children leaving home behind, 1,000 acres of crops left to ripen and rot, because a man eater is abroad, and no one knows who will be his next victim, although the Bengalese believe that one's days are numbered, and that death must come when the mark has been reached. An hour after the flight the vultures and hyenas are fighting over the spoils left behind.

The sun hastens into the west, sinks lower and lower, and by and by the red ball of fire drops out of sight, and darkness comes. There is no twilight, no gloaming. Five minutes ago it was daylight. Now it is night. Two miles to the north a nullah or creek comes down from the east and crosses the highway. It flows in the bed of a ravine choked with bush and brier and plant and creeper, and there is so little water that there is no bridge over the highway. Once over the highway it flows into another ravine, equally dark and gloomy, and 100 miles away its waters find a great river. At the first notes of the night birds the man eater is aroused. His lair is a mile from the highway and in a tangle so thick that men might have looked for him in vain. He wakes from his deep sleep with dry lips and parched tongue, and he whines and complains as he creeps down to the brook and searches for a pool into which to plunge his head until it is almost immersed. He drinks long and deep, like a horse which has traversed the desert from dawn to dark. When his thirst is at last satisfied, he stretches himself, growls his satisfaction and turns and faces down the ravine. There is nothing left of the man he killed the night before. What he did not eat the jackals were waiting to devour. He is hungry again, and he must kill to live.

With a footfall as soft as that of a rabbit, though betraying his presence every minute or two by an angry snarl at bush or rock or gliding serpent, the man eater makes his way down the ravine. At the highway, before he breaks cover, he listens to the north and the south to learn if anything is moving. There is no one to see him, nothing to disturb him, and with a couple of bounds and a catlike hiss he is across the road and hidden in bushes beyond. He turns as he enters the bushes and faces the road and his lair. It is the craft of the man eater to do this, to face in the direction he means to drag his victim. An hour goes by. Two hours slip away. The people have been warned, and not a human being has traveled this road since the sun was within an hour of setting. The man eater has settled himself down with many a complaining growl and whine, but not to sleep while he waits. His ears work nervously, and his eyes blaze, and his tail quivers as he bides his time.

A belated villager, who has been to a distant market, with his produce loaded on the back of a patient, lumbering ox—he has not heard of the man eater, of the flight of his family and friends. He rides the ox as he returns. He fears there may be a tiger or panther lurking along the highway, and when not absolutely quiet he is whispering prayers for protection. The tiger hears the step of the ox a long way off. His keen sighted eyes tell him in the darkness what is approaching. The ox advances with a plod, plod, plod, looking furtively to right and left at intervals, but scenting no danger. He comes to the creek, swallows the cud he has been chewing as he plodded along and lowers his head to drink. As suddenly as the report of a gun reaches one's ears, he hears an angry roar, feels sharp claws pricking his flesh, and as he rushes up the road through the darkness he is alone. The tiger's spring was not for him. Before the ox has galloped a mile the man eater has dragged his victim half way up the ravine to the spot where we found him as the sun went down. He will feast again tonight and sleep away the morrow.

Painted Arab Girls.

Shief is a very picturesque spot perched on a rock, with towers and turrets constructed of sun dried brick, only here, as elsewhere in these valleys, the houses are so exactly the same color as the rock behind them that they lose their effect. The rich have evidently recognized this difficulty and whitewash their houses, but in the poorer villages there is no whitewash, and consequently nothing to make them stand out from their surroundings. Arab girls before they enter the harem and take the veil are a curious sight to behold. Their bodies and faces are dyed a bright yellow with turmeric. On this ground they paint black lines with antimony over their eyes. The fashionable color for the nose is red, green spots adorn the cheek, and the general aspect is grotesque beyond description.

Woman wear their dresses high in front, showing their yellow legs above the knee, and long behind. They are of deep blue cotton, decorated with fine embroidery and patches of yellow and red sewed on in pattern.

It is the universal female dress in Hadramut and looks as if the fashion had not changed since the days when Hazarmaveth, the patriarch, settled in this valley and gave it his name (Genesis x, 26). The tall, tapering straw hat worn by these women when in the fields contributes, with the mask to make the Hadrami females as externally repulsive as the most jealous of husbands could desire.—Nineteenth Century.

The Sorrows of Childhood.

Mother (to 7-year-old daughter)—Carrie, what makes you look so sad?

Carrie—I'm thinking what a bother that little brother of mine will be to me about ten years from now, when I enter society and have a beau.—Texas Siftings.

She—Do they?

He—Yes. I am going to test you. What am I thinking about?

She (looking at the clock)—You are thinking of going home.—New York Press.

A Vindication.

"Well," said Quilkins, "I got even with that editor anyhow."

"In what way?"

"He said the joke I submitted was flat, and I proved to him that it was one of Sidney Smith's most successful efforts."—Washington Star.

Painted Like a Ruffian.

Caravaggio was originally a hod carrier and was afterward employed by the painters in the Vatican to grind their colors. He was fond of depicting scenes in low life, and it was said of him that he painted like a ruffian because he was a ruffian. His "Entombment of Christ," in the Vatican, was modeled on the funeral of a gypsy chief.—Exchange.

"Amaraca's Greatest Bootblack" is the sign displayed by a colored bootblack on Eighth avenue, New York city. Perhaps he builded better than he knew, for the name is very close to what some modern geographers say was its original form.

THE POLITICAL POT

Boiling Over in the Great Empire State.

BOTH PARTIES HUSTLING WITH ALL THEIR ENERGY.

The Fight Fiercely Waged in New York City.

NEW YORK, Oct. 23.—The Republican managers of the state campaign, while actively at work pushing the canvass in all parts of the state, say they are unable to find any distressing indications in the ranks, and in serene confidence are watching the attempts of their Democratic adversaries to adjust and harmonize the factional disturbances with which they are beset on all sides, especially in this city.

Ex-President Harrison will arrive here later in the week to attend to some private business, and while he is in the city it is Chairman Hackett's intention to arrange, if possible, a mammoth meeting, at which the ex-president will speak, and at which his former running mate, Mr. Morton, now the Republican candidate for governor, will be present.

Senator Hill spoke at Yonkers last night. He will speak at Brooklyn this afternoon and in New York and this vicinity until Friday, when he will return to the interior of the state. A great deal will depend upon the result of his visit and the conference he has with the state and local leaders.

The situation so far as the New York city and Brooklyn Democratic candidates for congress and assembly are concerned is very critical, with county Democratic candidates opposing the Tammany congressional and assembly candidates in this city, and Shepard candidates running against the regular nominees in the Brooklyn districts, save that represented by Coombs. There are nine congressional districts in this city and five in Brooklyn. The opposition of the county Democratic candidates of from one to four Tammany candidates in this city, and the Shepardites endanger four in the districts in Brooklyn.

As the margin by which the Democratic managers hope to carry the next house of representatives is very narrow, the situation is regarded as extremely grave at Democratic headquarters. All efforts heretofore made toward harmonizing differences to prevent the possibility of Republicans slipping in through Democratic divisions have proved ineffectual. Senator Faulkner, chairman of the congressional campaign committee, will be here again tomorrow to witness the result of the present effort.

Richard Croker and Perry Belmont, Mr. Cleveland's ex-minister to Spain, were at the Democratic headquarters yesterday regarding this matter. The rumor was rife and apparently well-founded that ex-Mayor Grace, who is at the head of the county Democracy organization, was willing to compromise on the basis of withdrawing the county Democracy candidates in seven of the New York city districts, if Tammany would withdraw ex-Senator Cantor in the Fifteenth and John Connolly in the Fourteenth, in order to give Robert Grier Monroe and Dewitt Warner clear fields.

The Tammany candidates for congress and for the assembly were represented as recalcitrant to Senator Hill. Mr. Croker and other leaders were said to be advising a policy of concession, but Lieutenant Governor Sheehan said last evening that no basis of agreement had yet been reached.

Hill Smoothing Difficulties.

At headquarters it was said that Senator Hill's campaigning trip in the state had been very successful in conciliating the opposing Democratic factions. Wherever possible, the Hill partisans were kept in the background, and the Cleveland Democrats managed the receptions and meetings.

Chairman Thatcher still insists that President Cleveland will speak in no uncertain tone at the right time. It is an open secret that a letter written by Judge Maynard, the unsuccessful Democratic candidate for supreme judge last year, detailing the manner in which his nomination was brought about and acquitting Senator Hill of responsibility therefor, is in existence, and it will probably be given out shortly.

Lieutenant Governor Sheehan gave out an interview in reply to the charges of colonization of voters made by the Republicans, in which he makes counter charges against them. He says that the Democratic committee have been repeatedly warned of the Republican colonization schemes, receiving such information from railroad officials and in other reliable manner.

A Question For the Courts.

NEW YORK, Oct. 23.—There is a deadlock over the Simpson-Campbell congressional fight. When the question was considered the Tammany commissioners offered a resolution recognizing Simpson as the Republican candidate from the Ninth district. This was lost, the Republican commissioners voting negatively. Then the Republican commissioners offered a resolution recognizing Campbell. This, too, was lost. The matter will now have to be decided by the courts.

Abbott Declines to Run.

CAMDEN, N. J., Oct. 23.—Hon. Leon Abbett has come out with a letter in which he upsets the calculations of the Democratic leaders in New Jersey by announcing that he is not a candidate for United States senator.

Tammanyite Withdraws.

NEW YORK, Oct. 23. — Timothy "Dry Dollar" Sullivan has filed with the commissioners the declination of Philip Wissig as Tammany candidate for assemblyman from the Third district.

Suicide by Fire.

HUDSON, N. Y., Oct. 23.—Mrs. Phebe Mortison of West Lebanon committed suicide by saturating her clothing with kerosene and setting fire to it. Her husband ran to her rescue and his hands were so severely burned that amputation of the fingers of both will be necessary.

All Are Well.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 23.—The schoolship Saratoga has arrived at the Delaware Breakwater. The vessel has been on her cruise since early spring. All on board are well.

Alleged Forger Captured.

TRENTON, Oct. 23.—Police authorities have arrested Arthur Woods of Littleton, N. H., who is wanted at that place for forgery and grand larceny.

Why Not.

If you are economizing why not look over your printing bills and see if you are not paying too much for printing. Call at this office and get prices on your work, and see if we cannot save money for you.

HERMIT OF SAN CLEMENTS.

Only Inhabitant of an Island Sixty Miles Off the California Coast.

San Clemente island, which lies 60 miles west one-half south of Point Loma lighthouse, on the southern coast of California, is 18½ miles long, with an average width of 2¼ miles and an area of 61½ square miles. It is a lonesome spot, suggestive of Spanish buccaneers and pirates generally. It rears its ugly head of black plutonic rock nearly 2,000 feet above the sea level, and in the deep gulches treasures a few sumac trees as a miser guards his gold. Cactus abounds. Natural water tanks in the rock are found on the edges of the plateaus. They were worn by rocks whirled around in holes during heavy rainfalls. The water in these tanks has saved the lives of many a thirsty mariner who has put in there for a supply of the life giving fluid. It was here that Cabrillo landed in October, 1542, after discovering San Diego harbor. He named the island La Victoria, after one of his smaller ships, the present name having been given a century later.

There is but one human being on San Clemente, the hermit herder, Tom Gallagher. Tom is a character with a history. His shaggy head and beard and curious attire give him the look of a savage, but Tom is very much of a white man in his heart, even though he has lived alone with his sheep for over 20 years. Occasionally a straggling junk seeking abalone, or now and then a fisherman, stops in the cave of San Clemente, brings Tom the news and furnishes him with supplies. To loosen Tom's tongue the explorer must have handy a chew of tobacco and a drink of whisky. He has a favorite water tank somewhere, but he never tells its location. Whisky is a novelty to this hermit, but it never causes him to forget himself sufficiently to reveal the details of his mainland life. He was a fisherman somewhere between San Diego and Monterey bay. He had good prospects, but one day he took it into his head to live alone on San Clemente. That is about all that Tom will say of himself.

There are people who claim to know Tom's history, and it is a romantic story, they say, with a love affair in it, of course. The woman jilted him, and he sought the island cloister. Tom lives in a comfortable hut, with a vegetable patch, chickens, a goat and his sheep. His is a regular Robinson Crusoe outfit, except that there is no man Friday to serve him. This lord of San Clemente does not want servants. He simply wants to be let alone, with only his animals and his gun for companions. —San Francisco Chronicle.

WORSE THAN HADES.

Terrible Fate of a Man Who Could Not Enter Heaven.

Mrs. Blank went shopping. Mr. Blank went with her. No one can explain just why he went, for she didn't positively compel it, and he is still regarded as sane! He went anyhow.

She wanted buttons. Those at Jenkins' store were too small, much too small. So she went to Kahn's and Poznanski's and the Merchants' Supply, then to Poznanski's and the Merchants' Supply and Kahn's. At Jenkins' again they showed her the same buttons, and she found them too large. Blank guessed it a case of expansion caused by the heat. It seemed hot to him. She got almost to another place, not quite, for they saw her coming and locked up for the night. So she went home.

That night Blank's hard breathing woke his wife, so she woke him in turn.

"What's the matter?" she demanded.

"I—I had a dreadful dream," he gasped. "I thought we were both dead, that you had gone to heaven, and that I—I hadn't!"

"How perfectly awful," she cried, grasping him convulsively around the neck, "to be separated, and"—

"We—we weren't separated," moaned Blank, with a shudder. "I—I could have endured that! But no—no, I dreamed you were to be allowed to go shopping forever, and that I was condemned to go with you!"—Kate Field's Washington.

Next to Ham.

They tell a pretty good story of a tourist who ventured beyond Deadwood. He was determined to see all there was that could be called wild and woolly and immediately demanded to know where he could ride on a real stagecoach. The Deadwood stagecoaches of dime novel fame are rotting, unused and unhonored, on the sides of the hills, but a stage line still runs between Deadwood and Spearfish. Perched beside the driver of this stage, the tourist was delighted to find that this man had really driven a coach in the good old days. All efforts to draw out some story or even a sage remark which could be carefully treasured and repeated were failures. They were bowling along the side of a creek, and the tourist finally said:

No response.

"Isn't there trout in this stream?"

"Umph!"

"Fine fish, sir."

No response.

"Don't you like trout?" asked the traveler in desperation, turning in his seat in a way that demanded an answer.

"Next to ham," was the surly response.

The astonished tourist was delighted with the result of his efforts when he finally figured out that ham was once a luxury and trout an everyday diet in that country.—Chicago Tribune.

She Shared Lola's Bonbons.

A west side belle has as a pet a fine greyhound which answers to the name of Lola. One of the young woman's many admirers recently sent her a large box of very choice bonbons of a more than usually expensive brand. The pert young miss acknowledged them as follows:

DEAR MR. ——: Thanks for those delicious bonbons. Lola and I are enjoying them together.

To this the young man promptly replied:

DEAR MISS ——Of course you are most welcome to the bonbons, and I'm glad you like them, but as a matter of fact they were intended for Lola exclusively.

And now the west side belle doesn't speak to him, and she has confided to Lola that he is a horrid man anyhow.—New York Herald.

The Second Marriage.

A quiet wedding either at home or church is in every way the most suitable for a woman about to be married the second time. And she should not, under any circumstances, wear either a white gown, a veil or orange blossoms. A costume of pale gray or a delicate lilac would be both pretty and suitable.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Most of the so called marble houses of the Rome of Augustus were not such in reality. The plasterer's art had then reached a high state of perfection and gave to stucco the appearance of the finest marble.

Somewhat In the Same Line.

"Beg pardon, sir," said the passenger in the skullcap, tired of the monotony of the journey and desirous of scraping an acquaintance with the man in the next seat, "are you traveling for some house?"

"No, sir," replied the other. "I am not in business. I am a Universalist preacher."

ENGLISH ON THE TONGUE.

There are few words in the English language of such comprehensive appropriateness as the word "things." We put on and take off "things." We put down and take up "things." We walk over "things" and pick "things" up and put "things" away. We love "things" and hate "things" and consider "things" and think about "things." We look beyond the "things" seen to the "things" not seen. And these are "things" temporal, and those are "things" eternal.

And each and every one of these "things" has a different significance and belongs to a different class. There are material "things" among them and immaterial "things." They are physical and mental, of heaven and earth, of time and of eternity. A word of no special definition, it designates everything in turn, for it may be anything, it may be nothing.

It is a facile snare to the slipshod writer. Dilating on the beauties of "everything," this "lovely thing" or that "exquisite thing" tempts him to rest satisfied with the yielding expression which saves search for a more specific word. It is the ready recourse of the shallow clatterer, who calls her friend a "sweet thing" as frequently as she speaks of her enemy as a "spiteful thing." It is the refuge of the lazy, the negligent, the ignorant talker of any age, to whom the proper names of articles are superfluous so long as the word "things" exists in the dictionary.

So universally misused, abused and overworked is this general term that Harper's Bazar advises as "the proper thing" under the circumstances to ignore it so far as possible in our own conversation and in the talk of other people and to insist that ideas be conveyed by words which mean exactly what is intended to be expressed, instead of by a word which means anything or nothing at all.

Most persons who use the word "trolley" do not know the origin of this term or why this name was given to the apparatus by which the electricity is conveyed from an overhead wire. It is traced as follows by Golden Days:

Twenty years ago the word was used to designate "a form of truck which can be tilted for carrying railroad materials or the like." This is the only definition of the word in Webster's dictionary of the edition of 1848. In the edition of 1892 of the same work three other definitions are added: 1. "A narrow cart that is pushed by hand or drawn by an animal." It is noted that this meaning of the word is in use in England, not in the United States. 2. "A truck from which the load is suspended on some kinds of cranes." This meaning is technical, according to Webster, and employed only in speaking of machinery. 3. "(Electric railway.) A truck which travels along the fixed conductors and forms a means of connection between them and a railway car."

It is easy to see how the primitive form of the electric trolley, which travels upon the wires, came to receive its name from its resemblance to other types of trolley, and the name, having been immediately given to this primitive form, was naturally retained when the method of connection was changed from a little truck moving on a wire to a mast having at its end a wheel pressing on the lower surface of the wire.

An Interesting Fact.

Some captious critics have wondered why Longfellow selected a chestnut tree as the one of all others which overshadowed the village smithy in his famous poem. These critics are probably unaware that the poet had a twofold reason for so doing, says the London Ironmonger. In the first place, the chestnut is among the most umbrageous of trees, and in the second place the horse chestnut bears on every twig near the "milky cones" at blooming time the imprint in miniature of a horseshoe, perfect in shape and including the nails. It is only reasonable to suppose that the original idea of the horseshoe was taken from this curious feature of the chestnut tree, and that is no doubt why the American poet—who, like Tennyson, was a deep student of botany—selected the chestnut as the tree most appropriate to overspread the smithy of the village blacksmith.

The Steam Power of the World.

From figures credited to the bureau of statistics in Berlin it appears that of the steam engines now working in the world four-fifths have been constructed during the last 25 years. France has 79,590 stationary and locomotive boilers; Germany, 59,000 land boilers, 1,700 ship boilers and 10,000 locomotives; Austria, 12,000 boilers and 2,800 locomotives. The working steam engines of the United States represent 7,500,000 horsepower; of England, 7,000,000 horsepower; Germany, 4,500,000 horsepower; France, 3,000,000 horsepower; Austria, 1,500,000 horsepower. This estimate does not include the locomotives, whose number in the world is 105,000, representing a total of 3,000,000 horsepower. The world's steam engines, therefore, aggregate more than [illegible]000,000 horsepower, equivalent approximately to the work of 1,000,000,000 men.

The "Wabbling" of the North Pole.

It has long been known that the earth's axis varies in an irregular way as regards its relation to fixed objects in space, but it is now reported as the result of recent observations that the earth's axis is a bit loose as regards the globe itself. The effect is that the north pole wabbles slightly. The variation in position is not over 50 feet, however, so there is no danger that any explorers who have gone to the arctic regions without this warning will get hurt by going too near.

Buried Head to the West.

An old custom prevails in some sections at the present day of burying a dead body with the head to the west. The original reason was that the dead may face to the east when the judgment day comes. A story is told to the effect that the first preacher at Easthampton, N. Y., directed that he be buried facing the west, that he might face his congregation at the day of judgment. He died 200 years ago and more.

A Large Chime of Bells.

The largest chime of bells said to have ever been made in this country has been ordered for St. James' church, Chicago, according to an exchange. It will be made in Baltimore and contain 17 bells, the largest weighing 5,000 pounds, and the total weight of the bells and fixtures will be over 25 tons.

ODD NEW YORK ORDINANCES.

The Chapter on Nuisances Contains Many Interesting Requirements.

Some of the local regulations under which New Yorkers live which it is a legal offense to violate or ignore are of a peculiar character. What is known as article 24 of the Revised Ordinances—the chapter on nuisances—is perhaps the most peculiar of all. Any person, it says, who shall permit any bear or other noxious or dangerous animal to run at large, or who shall lead any such animal with chain or rope or other appliance, whether such animal be muzzled or unmuzzled, in any street, avenue, lane, highway or public place within the corporate limits of New York shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. Any person, says section 240 of this chapter, who shall raise or fly any kite in any street, lane, avenue or public place south of Fourteenth street shall be fined $5. No goat shall be permitted to go at large on any street, avenue, lane, alley, pier or wharf under penalty of "$3 for every such goat found at large, to be paid by the owner or by the person having charge, care or keeping of such goat."

As goats cannot be impounded, the arrest of a stray goat in conformity with the ordinance quoted, even if the goat's defense did not make such attempted action impracticable, would be an ill advised proceeding, as the board of aldermen has not provided any place to which an offending goat may be taken. Section 236 declares—same chapter of nuisances—that no person shall bring into the city of New York or have in his, her or their possession in said city any oysters between the 1st of May and the 1st of September in any year under penalty of a fine of $5. No person shall swim or bathe in any of the waters within the jurisdiction of New York, except in public or private bathing houses, unless covered with a bathing suit. No grocer, innkeeper, tavern keeper or any other person shall have in his, her or their premises any flying horse or horses or whirligig or roundabout or other machinery or device, by whatever name it may be called, under penalty of $50.

No person shall use or perform with or hire or procure or abet any other person to use or perform with any hand organ in any of the streets or public places of New York before the hour of 9 a. m. or after the hour of 7 p. m. each day, nor during any part of the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday. No person shall perform upon a hand organ except such organ is licensed, but it is a question which has not yet been settled whether, in the view of the board of aldermen, a man who procures or abets another to play upon an unlicensed organ becomes per se an accessory before or after, and subject, therefore, to a fine of $2.75, more or less.

No person shall beat any drum or instrument for the purpose of attracting the attention of passengers in any street or lane of New York to any show of beasts or bird or other things in this city. No person shall place or suspend or cause or procure to be placed or suspended in or over any street of New York any cloth, yarn or garment for the purpose of drying the same under the penalty of $10. No person shall expose in any street, lane or avenue in New York any table or device upon which or by which a game of chance or hazard can be played.

The Fur Seal.

The fur seal—its name should be furry sea lion—is the most celebrated of all our fur bearers, and the United States government has been as active in protecting it from destruction as it was indifferent to the fate of the buffalo millions. If our great international dispute with England and Canada over the fur seal had arisen 70 years ago, before the days of peaceful arbitration, there would surely have been a war over it. Nor is our interest in our fur seal to be wondered at when we stop to consider that from 1870 to 1890 our national treasury received $6,000,000 from the Alaska Commercial company as royalty on the animals killed—six-sevenths of the purchase price of Alaska.

When to this we add the amount received in a 20 per cent import duty on the dressed skins as they came back to us from the English dyers, the total revenue derived from the fur seal in 20 years amounts to the enormous sum of $8,500,000. Such an animal was worth saving from destruction. No other animal ever became such a bone of contention between two great nations for a long period, the discussion winding up with a high and mighty conference of arbitration.

As usual, the whole trouble arose through the greediness of a few irresponsible and lawless individuals. The sealers of the Pacific coast insisted upon taking fur seals by shooting them in the open sea, by which wasteful process seven were lost for every three secured. But if it were not for the loss of money revenue derived from this animal, it is quite certain the government would have allowed the wasteful slaughter to go on until the last seal was dead.—St. Nicholas.

Well Named.

The simple process of discovering the meaning of a foreign word or phrase by virtue of its sound sometimes leads to peculiar results.

"Shure, an fwhat is this briggy brag the misthress is all the toime talkin to yez about an tellin yez to be so careful av it?" inquired the cook of the housemaid in a large family mansion. "Fwhat does briggy brag mane, Oi dunno?"

"It ain't briggy brag; it's bricky brack," returned the housemaid moodily, "an Oi'm thinkin if 'twas yersilf had the care av it yez wouldn't be long foindin out fwhat it meant. It's Frinch for breakety break, that's what it is. It's a lot av little ornamints an jooge an vases jist made for ketchin in the dusther an draggin thimselves off onter the floor an smashin into bits befoor a poor harrd wurrkin gell's oiyes. That's what bricky brack manes, an a good name it is fer the whole lot av 'em!"—Youth's Companion.

One of California's Sylvan Giants.

"Goliath," one of the largest of the famous "big trees" of California, measures 23 feet in diameter at the ground and 20½ feet eight feet higher up. "Goliath" is perfectly healthy and solid throughout. It has been estimated that this forest giant, denuded of his branches, would weigh 100,000 tons, and that it would "saw" 2,000,000 feet of clear lumber. The branches and tops would make not less than 100 cords of wood. Heller estimates the weight of its leaves alone at 2½ tons. —St. Louis Republic.

Unfair Reasoning.

He—I'm going to ask you a favor.

She—It is granted before you ask it.

He (triumphantly)—Well, I was going to ask you for a kiss.

She (breaking away)—Wait a minute. I said it was granted before you asked for it. So you must have had it.—New York Herald.

Referred to the Proper Department.

"Waiter!" sharply called out Rivers, who was dining at a restaurant. "I called for ham and eggs, and you've brought me roast beef! Hasn't this institution a —a managing editor?"

"Yes, sah," replied the waiter, proceeding stiffly to gather up the rejected dish. "But this belongs to the department of the exchange editor, sah."—Chicago Tribune.

DONOVAN ROSSA

Hastened Back to America by His Wife.

HE WANTS TO KNOW WHO UHL IS

Airs His Grievance in a Letter to Cleveland.

NEW YORK, Oct. 23.—Edwin F. Uhl, assistant secretary of state at Washington, has declared that O'Donovan Rossa is not a citizen of the United States, although he has been voting here for a number of years on papers granted by Judge Larremore in the court of common pleas on Feb. 21, 1871. Mr. Uhl holds that these papers are worthless, on the ground that the qualification of five years' continuous residence was not complied with.

O'DONOVAN ROSSA.

Mr. Uhl's ruling on this subject accounts for Mr. Rossa's return from Europe last spring earlier than he intended. Uhl refused to grant him a passport, and he did not, in consequence, visit Scotland and England, where he intended to deliver some lectures. Rossa has sent a letter to President Cleveland reciting the facts in the case.

Before going to Europe last May, Rossa wrote to Mr. Uhl for a passport. This was refused. In his letter to Mr. Cleveland, Mr. Rossa says:

Complains to Cleveland.

"President Cleveland, who is this Mr. Uhl whom you have around you as president of your passport bureau in Washington! I have suffered somewhat by the refusal of Mr. Uhl to send me a passport when I was going to Europe last May. I had engagements made to give some lectures in Ireland, England and Scotland. I made arrangements to sail on the Campania from New York on May 19. On May 13 I wrote for the passport. It did not come before the 19th. I sailed on the 19th.

"On May 28 my wife got Mr. Uhl's letter refusing me a passport, and telling her I was no citizen of the United States. That letter threw her into sickness. She wrote to me telling me not to go into England or Scotland; that she had reasons for telling me so, and asking that I come back to America as soon as I had filled my engagements in Ireland. My wife bosses me, and I obeyed her orders.

Going Into Details.

"Who is this Mr. Uhl? And do you say that my citizen papers are bad? I lived here; did business here in New York in the year 1863. Barney Ryan, a deputy sheriff here now in New York, lived in the same house with me at Madison and New Chambers streets. Three brothers of mine were in the war. That year I took out my first papers. In July, 1865, I left New York for Ireland. In September, 1865, I was returning to America. On Friday evening of Sept. 15 I was packing my trunk, as I was to leave the cove of Cork for America the following Sunday.

"The soldiers of the English government in Ireland arrested me and put me in prison, and kept me in English prisons up to January, 1871. Then the English sent me from Chatham prison to New York, and next month I went before Judge Larremore and told my story in the application I made for full papers of citizenship.

"He gave them to me by virtue of that clause of the constitution which says that the five years' "consecutive residence" in the United States holds good for the man who has taken out his first papers and leaves the country with the intention of returning, but who is detained in any manner that makes it impossible for him to return, and returns when he can."

LOCAL NEWS.

Be joyful and smoke Tower's corner.

Mrs. Adjutant Parker and Miss Nora Thompson conducted the Salvation army meeting last night.

The Misses McSorley were thrown from their team on Middlesex street, yesterday afternoon, but escaped with slight injuries.

The alarm from box 17 was occasioned by a blaze in an ash barrel in the house of J. A. Knowles, corner of Branch and Walker streets.

The ingrain weavers will hold their second social in Associate hall, Friday night, and if it is as successful as the previous one the hall will be crowded.

Notwithstanding the abundant warning that all water bills must be paid the present week there will be a score or more come under the shut-off penalty on next Monday. Strange fact, too.

Road Race on Saturday.

The Vesper road race will occur on Saturday at the boulevard. Afterwards there will be an eight mile race and entries can be made with A. E. Rhodes, Emil Hansen, and Dr. Snyder will act as handicapper.

School Board Will Meet.

The school committee will hold its regular meeting next Monday evening. The illness of George M. Harrigan will prevent his attendance, but he is paired with Rev. Mr. Greene who will also be unable to be present.

Instruction For Our Teachers.

Miss W. Bertha Hintz, sketch artist of Boston, gave a lesson in sketch work, to the school teachers of this city in High school hall yesterday afternoon. Each teacher is provided with blackboard paper on which she sketches, and whatever work she does becomes her property. Miss Hintz will give a lesson each afternoon, excepting Saturday, this week.

She will also visit some of the schools during the week, and assist the teachers in sketch-work. She was secured to give these lessons by Supt Whitcomb, at a request of a number of the teachers.

Cash, Courage and Capacity.

Under this heading O'Sullivan Bros. announce in today's issue their great purchase of nearly 500 pairs of ladies' $5 kid button and lace boots at 40 per cent. reduction. In these days of large deals it is only the firm with large capacity, courage and cash that such inducements are offered to, as they only can handle them. In this case the ladies who wear fine shoes will have an opportunity to get fitted with $5 boots at $3, and, judging from the vast patronage O'Sullivan Bros. enjoy, even as large a purchase as 500 pairs won't last long. To even things up 140 pair men's $4 shoes are thrown in at $3.

THE PYTHIAN SWINDLER.

He Has Reaped Over $400 On His Bogus Drafts.

The man who has been swindling K. of P. lodges in New England and New York, is now operating in Pennsylvania, with the bogus drafts for sick benefits.

Master of Exchequer A. G. Prasser has written to Mr. Wright giving the following description of the swindler: About 5 feet 6 or 7 inches in height, medium build, dark complexion, small dark mustache, medium small hands, wore kid gloves, light brown overcoat and latest style hat. He "appeared much hurt when he could not get the order cashed."

Among the swindler's latest pilferings the following have been reported: Oct. 18, M. of E., C. S. Wise of Buehler lodge 260, Marysville, Perry Co., Pa., cashed order 565 on Wamesit lodge, dated Oct. 9, for $20, drawn in favor of George T. Curtin and giving the names of C. C. and K. R. S. of Wamesit lodge as C. A. Wilson and J. B. Swift.

W. J. Redfern of Wilmerding lodge No. 319, Wilmerding, Alleghany county, Pa., cashed a bogus order for $20 drawn in favor of Walter S. Mayo. This was prior to the 13th inst.

Under date of Oct. 17, H. E. Leader, K. of R. and S. of the Blair lodge, Altoona, Pa., writes that his lodge cashed a draft for $20 drawn in favor of Geo. T. Curtin. It was alleged draft 565 dated Oct. 9, and the officers names were given as at Buehler lodge.

On Saturday Wamesit lodge was drawn on through the First National bank for another bogus draft dated Sept. 24, cashed by Silver Cross lodge, Gloversville, N. Y., for the swindler, who there gave his name as J. F. Aldrich.

The sum of $400 has already been secured by the schemer.

THE BOWLING ART

The Music hall bowling alleys in Providence, which are owned and controlled by Lowell parties, were opened with a great spread last evening.

Cards for the opening were issued and bowling was free during the evening. A Lowell delegation headed by Philip J. Farley, Esq., and John B. Swift went down yesterday morning.

The Miserables team was also present and showed the large audience who witnessed the practice play how the record breakers knock down the pins. It was a great night for the Lowell boys and they were on their mettle. The Continental orchestra of Providence gave an excellent concert during the evening. The large alleys were decorated with bunting and the national colors.

Besides bowling one may also enjoy a game of pool or billiards, for adjoining the alleys is a parlor containing ten tables.

The proprietors have been very fortunate in securing John J. Fallon, a former Lowell boy, as manager of the alleys. Mr. Fallon is very well known in this city, Boston and in fact throughout Eastern Massachusetts. He is always attentive to whatever business he undertakes, and his every effort is to advance the interests of his employer.

While in this city, he managed the Eagle shoe store on Dutton street and afterwards entered the employ of Dyer Bros., in So. Boston.

He is anxious to have his old Lowell friends visit Providence and assures them a cordial welcome.

Miss Tucker's Return.

One of the best pleased audiences seen in Music hall was present last night at the opening performance of Miss Ethel Tucker and her own company. "Our Ethel" must have felt a decided thrill as she came on the stage to see the host of friendly faces and hear the cordial welcome accorded her. She showed her appreciation of the reception for her work as the poor Cricket was equal to the best she has ever done in this city. In all the varying moods of the character she was equally at home and so closely was her audience interested that even when the curtain finally fell they wanted to call her out again. Her company is an excellent one, individually and collectively. The costumes, scenery and appointments are deserving of praise. "Fanchon" will be repeated tonight. Wilkie Collins famous play "The New Magdalen" will be the bill for Wednesday and Thursday nights. Also for special ladies reception matinee, Wednesday afternoon, when Miss Tucker will be glad to meet the ladies of Lowell, immediately after the matinee.

SOCIALISTIC LABOR.

As Represented by the People's Party Emphasized at a Rally.

The local people's party rallied to the number of 200 in Jackson hall last night. John J. Ryan of Lawrence presided and the gubernatorial candidate, David Taylor of Boston spoke, giving long and careful attention to socialism and its growth, arraigning the present political and economic systems, and scoring the capitalistic classes. His closing argument was that socialistic labor is a party through which the people can get their rights.

DEFINITE NEWS

Of the Czar's Condition is Hard to Find.

SOME RELIABLE OLD WORLD NEWSPAPER GOSSIP.

On the Future of Russia's Royal Family.

LONDON, Oct. 23.—In all the continental capitals and London there have been streams of callers—official dignitaries, aristocrats and humble people—at the Russian embassies. To these, however, little information concerning the czar was vouchsafed, and that little consisted of gloomy forebodings. Prayers and masses were unceasingly offered from St. Petersburg to Vladivostok.

A dispatch from St. Petersburg says that besides the offering of prayers for the recovery of the czar in all of the churches, the holy synod has ordered that there be prayers for the same end in the army and navy on board the vessels of the Russian Pacific and Mediterranean squadrons. Archbishop Moghiieff has ordered prayers in all the Catholic churches.

The Times' Vienna correspondent telegraphs that it is announced from Sofia, Bulgaria, that no special services have been held there for the recovery of the czar. The clergy appear to have been instructed from headquarters.

The wild rumors reported from St. Petersburg were repeated yesterday in still wilder form. From Moscow comes a report that there are people there who insist that the czarewitch has refused to ascend the throne, and that the czar in order to compel him has ordered his marriage to Princess Alix. The Muscovites fear that should the rumors prove true, they will have to face the gravest peril possible. While the people crowd the churches to pray for the czar, the fears that the rumor has truth gives added fear for their petitions.

The question of succession still holds the principal place in the flood of statements, rumors and surmises. The Cologne Gazette prints a St. Petersburg telegram stating that the czar has given orders for a settlement of the succession to the imperial council. He has advised that Grand Duke George, his second son, should, on account of the state of his health, renounce his claim in favor of his brother, Grand Duke Michael, who ought to take the oath as the heir presumptive to the throne.

Czarewitch Is Obstinate.

The relations between the czar and czarewitch do not appear to be of the best. The statements, however, are unfounded that the czar had a heated quarrel with his son, which excited him in a manner dangerous to one of his condition.

Still it is no secret that the czarewitch does not care much about the throne, not on account of love affairs, but from observation of the continual excitement and terror in which his father lived. The suddenness of the crisis has served to intensify his aversion, yet nobody here believes he will execute his intention to renounce the throne.

I hear that preparations have been made to decrease the aversion of the czarewitch to succeed his father. It is stated that during the last three days he has signed all official documents, and that the czar has admonished him to attend to the advice of M. Bunge, president of the ministerial committee.

Princess Alix at Livadia.

Princess Alix arrived at Livadia last night. The czarina accompanied her to the chapel of the castle, where both prayed earnestly that the life of the czar be spared. The czarina looked careworn, but she walked without assistance. All the reports stating that her majesty has been stricken with paralysis are untrue.

The Berliner Tageblatt publishes a telegram from Livadia asserting that the betrothal of the czarewitch and Princess Alix will formally occur this evening, and the marriage take place tomorrow. This hastening of the ceremony is said to be rendered necessary by the rule of the Romanoff family compelling every heir apparent to marry before ascending the throne and to proclaim his successor.

On this account the proclamation of the nearest agnate, the Grand Duke Michael, as the ultimate heir apparent, is generally expected. Another rule in connection with the accession requires that when the oath of allegiance to the new czar is administered to the troops and officials an oath of fidelity to the heir apparent must be taken at the same time.

The Official Gazette announces that Princess Alix has arrived at Livadia, but does not publish a word about her marriage. From what I hear, no marriage is likely now, but there will be a formal betrothal, and the benediction of the czar under the circumstances will bind the princess and the czarewitch until the wedding ceremony takes place.

Has Loss Appetite.

The bulletin issued last night by the physicians in attendance on the czar says: "His majesty slept five hours intermittently. He rose this morning as usual. His appetite has lessened. His strength has not increased."

The Standard's St. Petersburg correspondent telegraphs the following: Everybody is surprised that no mention is made of the pulse or temperature; in short, there is no clew as to what the disease from which the czar is suffering actually is. Medical men are unable to form any conjectures as to the possible issue. It is rumored that an operation is contemplated. Another story has it that the malady is expected to reach a crisis within the next day or two, but as to what the operation or malady are, even the best informed are ignorant.

The St. Petersburg correspondent of The Daily News says that private telegrams received Monday from Livadia confirm the official dispatches. They stated that the czar's mental faculties are somewhat more active, and that he seems to have gained confidence by his short walk in the castle garden.

The weather at Livadia is beautiful. All agree that much importance must not be attached to his majesty's temporary betterment. The doctors keep their patient out of bed as much as possible, first to maintain his moral energy and second on account of the weakness of his heart, which with long reclining becomes very dangerous.

Struck For the Old Scale.

NORTH ADAMS, Mass., Oct. 23.—The help in the Briggsville mill refused President Backer's offer of a restoration of 8 per cent and two hours and began a strike yesterday. The indications are that a compromise will be effected and that the help will return. About 200 hands are employed in the mill.

FOR GOOD CITIZENSHIP.

Lyceum League's Purpose Is to Train Young Men For Pure Politics.

BOSTON, Oct. 23.—The management of the Lyceum League of America was transferred last night from The Youth's Companion company to a directorate, of which Hon. Theodore Roosevelt is president. The Lyceum league is a national organization of young men who are training themselves for the duties of citizenship.

It is in some respects like an old-fashioned debating society, except that its discussions are confined to American political, economic and social questions, and much attention is given to local government reform. Its lyceums are scattered through all the states. It is non-partisan. In his inaugural address, President Roosevelt said:

"The prime purpose of the league is to cultivate good citizenship. In political life, whether a man acts without or within party lines, is not of very great moment, if only he acts honestly, fearlessly and effectively. Parties are necessary. But no man has a right to condone crime or to excuse moral shortcomings of any kind because of alleged party necessity. With the young American it rests to decide the failure or success of the tremendous experiment begun by Washington and carried on by Lincoln."

Advance Was Refused.

NEWBURYPORT, Mass., Oct. 23.—Yesterday the 100 cutters for the extensive shoe contractor, E. P. Dodge, notified the firm that they would strike if by 4 p. m. their new price-list, the minimum of which was $15 a week per man, was not acceded to. The firm declined, and the cutters quit work. This will cause a closing of the shops, depriving at least 500 persons of employment.

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., Oct. 23.—Another strike was begun at the Wamsutta mills yesterday. The wide loom weavers in No. 7 mill, about 50 in number, were requested to take another loom, making five looms for each weaver. The request was not complied with, the weavers leaving the mill in a body rather than take the extra work.

ROME, Oct. 23.—Mgr. Boeglin, editor and proprietor of The Moniteur de Rome, was arrested last night and will be expelled from the country. The Moniteur de Rome has stopped publication. Many conductors who have been considered trusty men have been discharged, and many more removals are to follow. Employes are very much stirred up over the affair.

SALVATIONISTS' METHODS.

General Booth Declares That the End Justified the Means.

NEW YORK, Oct. 23.—The members of the Salvation Army gathered in Union square last evening, and after greeting the venerable General Booth, dispersed to reassemble in Carnegie Music hall, where an audience of 5000 greeted General Booth. The boxes were filled with fashionable men and women.

In the midst of a picturesque group on the stage the general was the striking and central figure. He was surrounded by his staff officers, the bands, and slum brigade. The background of this group was composed of the banners of the army, bearing such inscriptions as "Harlem for Jesus" and "The Bowery for our Lord."

Commander Booth led in prayer, and then the Rev. Dr. Bradford read an address of welcome to General Booth. The address was signed by Rev. Dr. Parkhurst, M. K. Jessup, W. E. Dodge, Dr. Hastings, D. J. Burrell, A. J. Palmer and others. As Dr. Parkhurst's name was mentioned, there was a round of applause.

Commander Booth then presented his father, the general, with a handsomely framed testimonial from the staff officers. General Booth made a speech, in which he briefly told the history of the army.

"Why did I undertake this work?" he asked. "Because in one part of the east end of London the population had never been inside a church. I drew the painted women from the street and the drunkards around me and preached the gospel of Jesus to them. Before them Christianity was a byword of reproach on their lips.

"People have questioned our mode of operations—the noise and banners—but I claim the end has justified the means. We have planted our banner on the walls of St. Petersburg and in distant India, and will push our fight to every corner of the earth."

Disastrous Underground Fire.

DENVER, Oct. 23.—A fire, caused by spontaneous combustion, in a hill above the town of Marshal, 30 years ago, threatens to communicate to the surrounding coal fields. The fire rages throughout an underground mine of 300 acres, and spouts flames, cinders and smoke through a dozen outlets. Property worth millions of dollars has been destroyed. Two weeks ago the miners were driven by smoke from the drift of the last coal mine that was workable.

THREE SCORE VICTIMS.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 23.—Captain Hudgins of the coffee bark, Dom Pedro II, gives a graphic description of a dynamite explosion that occurred in Rio a few days before his vessel sailed for Baltimore.

A Brazilian soldier discovered near the English cemetery a subterranean magazine in which the insurgents of the recent rebellion had concealed a quantity of gunpowder, cartridges and dynamite shells. The soldier reported his find to the general commander, and a cart was sent to the scene to remove the contents.

A detachment of soldiers and a curious crowd of citizens followed it to the little hill. A quantity of shells had been placed in a pile and others had been passed out close behind it, when one of the soldiers, while in the act of handling a shell, dropped it among the others.

The same second an explosion shook the earth. A sheet of flame shot upward and a cloud of whitish smoke came into view. The vessels in the harbor rocked at their moorings, and the city was much excited. The soldiers and mules were blown into fragments, and only the iron tires of the cart wheels were found. Over 60 persons were reported killed.

On the Way to Gotham.

BUZZARD'S BAY, Mass., Oct. 23.—The Clevelands left here this morning at 8:30 by special train. The train will run a special to Middleboro, thence to Providence, where it will be attached to a regular afternoon train for New York. Those leaving on the car with the president and family were Mrs. Perrine, Miss Rose Cleveland and the three detectives who have been here this summer. The president appears to be in the best of health. He says he is thoroughly rested and spent an enjoyable vacation.

STRIKE SITUATION GROWING SERIOUS IN FALL RIVER.

Power of Weavers' Union Has Been Shown and if the Mill Men Get Ugly They Will Shut Down the Mills.

It is very evident that times are growing serious in Fall River for the weavers are still joining the strikers and some mill men said last night that they would not now give way to the strikers under any consideration, until they return to work, for the reason that they fear a continuation of present methods if they prove successful in this instance.

There are other manufacturers who, after seeing the power of the weavers, now contend that a great mistake was made in treating with the spinners on one basis and with the weavers on another and much lower one. These men believe that the only way out of the present muddle is to rectify the mistake as early as possible and preserve the old good feeling between employers and employes.

A SAD CASE

Thomas Briggs belongs in Stoneham but said he was working in Billerica and partook of some cider and got drunk. He told the court about a dozen times that if he was released he would sign the pledge. Briggs wanted to get out badly. He told Judge Hadley that "he wished to God he would release him, as he wanted to see his mother." The judge told him "he was a good talker but not a good worker." He was given 24 hours to leave the city.

Jennie McDermott was sent to jail for five months for drunkenness.

When Fred A. Weaver pleaded guilty to a charge of drunkenness, Judge Hadley remarked that "this was one of the hardest cases he had to deal with inasmuch as he is intimately acquainted with the young man's family, and has known the young man himself ever since childhood. His parents have given him every opportunity to do right, and he has enjoyed many advantages. But he has been ungrateful. He is a skilled workman and would make a good citizen only for drink." He told Officer Tuttle to talk with Weaver, and ascertain if he has the moral strength to stop drinking.

HOW FOSS TRIES TO WORK FRENCH VOTERS.

The License Promises Will Never Be Fulfilled—A Prominent French Citizen Leaves Republican Party on Account of the A. P. A. Contingent.

Below is a communication from a French voter, a man of intelligence who has been a republican and abandons that party because of its alliance with the A. P. A. This is an example worthy of imitation by other French voters who, by supporting republicans may without knowing it be electing men endorsed by the A. P. A. and pledged to ostracise and disfranchise Catholics. It is unAmerican, undemocratic to raise a religious issue in politics or to discriminate against any man on account of his religion. Catholics do not do that because Archbishop Ireland, one of the greatest Catholic leaders of the country, advises them never to refuse to vote for a good candidate, because he happens to be a Protestant. But the religious issue has been forced upon Catholics by a lot of bigots and they must defend themselves by refusing to vote for their avowed and fanatical enemies.

To elevate the A. P. A. is to pave the way for the overthrow of constitutional liberty, to extinguish religious freedom and set up a religious or rather an irreligious test as a passport to official preferment. The subjoined letter from a prominent French citizen will be found of interest:

LOWELL, MASS., Oct. 25th, 1894.

Editor DAILY SUN:

Dear Sir—Will you be so kind as to allow me space in your paper to express my sentiments in regard to the French people and the A. P. A. Now, Mr. Editor, in one of your editorials in one of last week's papers you as much as said that the French people were in line with the A. P. A. on account of the Fremont meeting in Boston having a look of that kind. But I assure you, and the democrats of this city and elsewhere, that they have more to gain than lose by the A. P. A. antics. Now, I am a Frenchman and was always a republican, but having been a reader of your paper for the last two years I have read enough to satisfy me. I am a Catholic and I would not now vote a republican ticket for fear of voting for a man who is against my creed and put up by the A. P. A. So you see the good republicans are to blame for siding with the A. P. A. I know there is a good many French voters in the city who would express themselves in the same strain had they the courage to do so, but I have defended the French people in all caucuses. I have done so in this A. P. A. business to the best of my ability, and no French voter should support the party that has the A. P. A. in its ranks. Ask my friend Mr. Rourke of Ward one if I haven't been a republican, but am so no more. I remain yours truly,

ROCHAMBEAU.

Wm. F. Lyons of Kitson's machine shop is a candidate for the common council from Ward One.

Cornelius A. Daly, the Ward One druggist, is a candidate for the school committee in Ward One. He is a man of education and experience.

Thomas F. Garvey of the Cigarmakers' union who fought for Sen. Brady at the Central Labor union, Sunday, is a prominent candidate for the common council in Ward One. He has a large following and excellent chances of success.

It is reported that a couple of French republican ex-councilmen have been engaged working among the French voters in the interest of Foss. They have been promising liquor licenses through Mr. Foss's influence with the commission but as the commission allows nobody to promise anything on their account these gentlemen have been working a game of bluff. It is well that the voters, liquor dealers and others, should understand that all who make such promises are doing so without any authority and purely as a game of bluff. It is not likely that any French citizen will be deluded by such empty and delusive promises into supporting an A. P. A. candidate.

The populists had a rally in Jackson hall last evening. The audience was a small one and consisted partly of ladies.

The Morning Times has the following: "A republican member of the license commission rather puts a spoke in the wheel of the Foss managers when he says that no license promised in behalf of Foss to aid his campaign will, under any circumstances, be granted. That statement is likely to cause a cold chill in the 'back shop' phalanx."

Among the councilmanic candidates for the republican nomination in Alderman Lovejoy's ward is Burton A. Wiggin, a prominent young man and foreman for his father, Wm. H. Wiggin. The number of candidates cropping up in this ward promises a lively caucus.

Councilman O'Day is a candidate for renomination in Ward Six and he wants the voters to know how strongly he will favor their interests in the common council.

The French democrats organized on Sunday at the Clarendon hotel, the purpose being to promote registration and to work for the success of the democratic ticket. The French democrats are influenced as much by the A. P. A. movement as by any other cause in opposing candidates who sympathize with this proscriptive order.

Congressman O'Neill is to stump New York for David B. Hill. He is an able and convincing speaker.

Hon. George Fred Williams got a splendid reception in Lawrence last night. The democrats of Lowell would like to hear him. They were delighted with his pointed arguments and brilliant address last year.

The Lawrence Tribune says:

"Lawrence people will take peculiar pleasure in welcoming John E. Russell on the night of Nov 2, when he will speak at the Opera house. Lawrence was one of the seven Massachusetts cities that endorsed his principles by giving him a plurality last year. His lead over Greenhalge a year ago was 364. Lawrence ought to do a great deal better than that this year."

Good for Lawrence she stands unmoved in the face of every political storm, as firm in her democracy as the rock of Gibraltar. Would that Lowell followed her example.

Mayor Mathews of Boston announces that he is not a candidate for re-election. This is confirmed by a statement of Hon. James Donovan, chairman of the democratic city committee.

Elihu B. Hayes, Hon. William E. Barrett and Henry Cabot Lodge all on one platform. The lamb lies down inside the lion.

There can be no reason why a water bill should remain unpaid after Saturday next. Liberal notice has been given.

Green sells sewing machines cheaper than any house in Lowell; cleans watches or replaces mainsprings. Springs for $1.00, all jewelry work in proportion, 88 Merrimack street.

Nothwithstanding the abundant warning that all water bills must be paid the present week there will be a score or more come under the shut-off penalty on next Monday. Strange facts too.

THEATRICAL NEWS.

The production of Faust by Lewis Morrison and his excellent company last night was magnificent throughout, the scenic effects being especially grand. The repetition tonight should draw a large audience.

Big Wrestling Match.

Harry Watson and R. M. Yarnold called at THE SUN office last evening and stated that they had signed an agreement to wrestle at collar and elbow, best two falls in three, on some date to be mutually agreed upon, but not later than November 17.

The match is for $200 a side and Watson has the privilege of naming the hall in which it will take place.

Yarnold agrees to throw Watson twice in twenty minutes or forfeit the stakes.

The men met nine years ago before the Fairfield club in Vermont, and the match was declared a draw after the men had wrestled one hour and each had secured one fall. The purse was divided.

Firemen to Practice Bowling.

Soon the sound of falling pins will be heard in the subterranean parts of the Palmer street engine house, for in the basement two bowling alleys are being built. This is a good move and the first step towards a "gym" for the department. The work is being done by the permanent firemen in the house after getting permission to put them in and to make over the basement. The firemen also settle expense so that useless space in the cellar is being finely utilized at no expense to the city and to the equal benefit of the firemen and the city property. Ed. Morse and Henry Farrell are keeping an eye on the work. The alleys will be of regulation size and finely equipped.

A Historic Lot of Dirt.

E. P. Woods took into the water board office yesterday a glass bottle containing a small portion of the first shovelfull of earth dug on the ground where the old reservoir is located by Mayor J. P. Folsom in 1870, and William Kittredge wheeled the first barrowful of earth.

First this Season.

This line of Boys' Waists is recognized as the best, and justly so. Its great advantage over all other waists is it's detachable waistband, which makes it invaluable when the waist reaches the washtub. ALDERMEN QUICKLY SETTLE THE STREET RAILWAY QUESTION.

Restrictions Given Out With the Permits Which Will Make Both Companies Contribute to the City's Welfare.

After two lengthy hearings and several hours deliberation the mayor and aldermen last evening voted unanimously to grant to the Lowell, Lawrence and Haverhill, and the Lowell & Suburban Street Railway companies, the locations asked by them on First street. And all this, in spite of the remonstrance of 300 citizens represented by Fred'k Lawton, Esq., and the noble fight for his rights single handed by Major Rowell, a member of the syndicate of which Alderman Lovejoy is a member, and which owns 70 acres of land on the line of one proposed route. The opposition of the Locks and Canals company did not amount to much.

President Campbell of the Lowell, Lawrence & Haverhill company, witnessed the triumph of his company's efforts to gain admittance to this city and Percy Parker, treasurer of the local company seemed pleased when he saw eight aldermen vote in favor of his petition.

Squire Qua seemed placid when the decision of the board was announced, and young Lawyer Richardson hustled home to convey the news to his learned and respected "pa." Yesterday's meeting of the aldermen was one that adjourned over from last Thursday evening. It was called for 4 o'clock and the members were on time. So were representatives of the interested parties.

The mayor summoned the aldermen to his reception room. Col. Francis and the engineer of the Locks and Canals company were consulted, and the aldermen also heard President Campbell and Counsel Qua of the Lowell, Lawrence & Haverhill company.

The executive session lasted till 5.45, when the meeting resumed.

It was evident that some decision had been reached. Mayor Pickman called to order and looked at Alderman Westall who returned the glance. Then his honor gazed inquiringly at Alderman Lovejoy who wants to be mayor. The alderman from the fifth smiled at Westall and then said: "Mr. Mayor, I understand that there are some legal papers to be drawn up so

"Never mind stating that" replied the mayor, and the motion passed.

At 6 o'clock the board again went into executive session in the mayor's reception room, presumably to prepare a resolution and agree upon conditions to go with the resolution granting the company's petition.

It was 7.25 when they again went into open meeting.

After Mayor Pickman called to order the following petitions were referred: of Capt. L. C. Prouty for a landing place for boats on the upper Merrimack river; of James Flaherty, for a street light on L street; of John Ryan for an electric light at the corner of Westford and Pine streets; of C. I. Hood, protesting against the location of a pole at the corner of Eliot and Middlesex streets.

Notice was received from the county commissioners that a hearing will be held next month on the petition to widen Gorham street.

A resolution introduced by Alderman Stanley was then passed unanimously granting a location of tracks on First street to the L. L. & H. Railway Co., as petitioned for by them.

A resolution was also passed granting a location of tracks on First street to the Lowell & Suburban company as petitioned for.

The Lowell and Suburban company was also granted the right to lay a single track on Rogers street to the Tewksbury line. Their petition to relocate tracks from East Merrimack and Hoyt street to the junction of Nesmith and Wyman streets was refused.

The agreement signed by the companies in return for the locations granted them, provides that all poles shall be of a height and color acceptable to the mayor and aldermen; gives the firemen in case of fire permission to cut wires or order a current discontinued, the same to be repaired at the expense of the companies; binds them to pave between the tracks and 18 inches on each side of them and to keep the road on First street, in which the tracks are laid free from snow and ice, in the winter time.

The agreement with the L. L. & H. company further provides that the company shall build a way 50 feet wide along their route and make the same fit for travel. They shall not oppose laying it out as a public way, and also agree to pay all damages arising from such laying out.

Shortly after 8 o'clock the board adjourned to the Merrimack house, and dined. After that the members attended the performance of "Faust" at the Opera house.

ONE YEAR AT HARD LABOR.

He Took the Sentence Calmly and the Light Sentence Created Considerable Surprise.

When Superior court came in this morning much delay was caused by the absence of counsel of prisoners. Judge Fessenden said that hereafter cases which are delayed by counsel would be transferred to the Cambridge list for trial.

The case of George Robinson for receiving stolen property was changed to the Cambridge list as his counsel, Hon. Jere. Crowley is in the south.

In the Morton case Inspectors Allen and Laflamme testified that the defendant had admitted to them that he took $85 from the safe and went to Boston, where he bought a watch and bicycle suit, afterwards going to his home in Pittsfield where he was arrested. He wore the bicycle suit at the trial, having been in jail since his arrest.

Judge Fessenden asked Morton if he had anything to say, and Morton attempted to speak, but finally burst out crying. He finally composed himself and informed the court that he had nothing to say to the charge. The jury retired and returned in a short time with a verdict of guilty.

The case of Catharine Connors of Fox's yard who is well known in police circles, for alleged larceny of $1.50 from Catharine White was taken up. Catharine was convicted in the lower court and she appealed. The facts of the case were reported in the police court record at the time.

Lawyer Fay appeared for the defendant.

The White woman left $1.50 on her bed one day in September and the Connors woman came in and as she alleged purloined the money. Three witnesses were called and gave the same testimony as in the lower court. When the government's case had been finished, the case of who killed his brother in Graniteville, was taken up for sentence, to accommodate Lawyer Morrison, Reed's attorney who wished to get away.

District Attorney Weir explained the circumstances of the case as have been reported, putting in Reed's remark that if he had not killed his brother, the latter would have killed him. At the time he fired the shot, Charles was reaching for a gun. A gun was found nearby. But, the district attorney said if Charles had been reaching for the gun, it would have been impossible for him to receive the wound which he did. This was the opinion of the doctors at the autopsy. The trouble arose over Willard's refusal to go to work at Charles' request. Charles, Willard said, had threatened to shoot him if he didn't go to work. The district attorney said there was evidence that Willard had also threatened the life of Charles as the latter beat him terribly some time before. Charles was much larger and more quarrelsome and the district attorney had some doubt that if he had pleaded not guilty a jury would convict him on that complaint.

Hon. J. H. Morrison, for the defendant, said that he was satisfied that outside of the dispute, regarding the position of the wound, he felt certain that no jury would convict him. Charles had said "D—n you if you don't come down, I will kill you," according to Williard's statement, Charles came up with a shot gun in his hands and as Williard had no chance to escape he shot him. Willard also said that he took the gun out of his brother's hands and put it against the wall. Mr. Morrison honestly believed that Willard was justified in shooting Charles, and he said that the towns-people were surprised to hear that Charles had been killed, but would not have been surprised had Charles killed Williard.

Judge Fessenden said there are cases where taking a life may be justifiable, but it seems to be that the measures taken by the defendant in this case were unreasonable as death was the result.

Reed was sentenced to the house of correction for the term of one year.

The Connors case was then resumed and Lawyer Fay put on the defendant and two others. Arguments were made and the case was given to the jury shortly before adjournment.

STILL FOR MUNICIPAL REFORM

MORE IDEAS ADVANCED BY THE BOARD OF TRADE.

Final Action Has Been Postponed Until the Regular Meeting Next Month—The Opinion Is Divided.

The special meeting of the board of trade held last evening for the purpose of discussing municipal taxation and expenditure attracted a fair attendance. The resolution introduced by the committee was as follows;

Resolved, That it is the sense of this board that the supervision of roads, bridges sewers and commons, including the employment and direction of subordinates, the selection of material and all the powers and duties that are now associated with such supervision should be lodged with the city engineer, whose term of office should be extended to three or five years.

President Hanscom read a letter from Mr. Sullivan L. Ward in which he commended the board for its action in the matter and advised selecting councilmen without regard to party, race or creed.

Mr. C. H. Coburn said his policy was "spend thriftily and pay as you go." The appropriations should be large enough to meet all expenses without any regard to the tax rate and borrowing and "piecing out" should be avoided. The mayor should have more power and changes should be made in the two branches. To sum up he said the city was suffering from over-taxation complicated with enlarged expenditures, and a strong decoction of new charter is the remedy needed.

Mr. C. E. Adams favored the New York committee of 70 idea.

L. J. Smith did not fully favor the resolution, but he thought several departments should be put under one administrative board. Men have been elected to office because they were labeled "democrat" and "republican," not having ever made a study of municipal government. He was a democrat but could see no democratic politics in the city government.

Councilman Tryder thought the heads of departments had too much power. He couldn't see where a councilman cost the city $10,000 each.

John F. Murphy wanted to amend the resolution striking out "city engineer" and inserting "board of public works."

W. H. Parker suggested calling a mass meeting to appoint a committee of 70 or 100 to make up a ticket of capable men.

HOME MISSIONS

National Meeting of the Missionary Association.

OPENED IN THE FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

Warm Welcome to Clergymen by Mayor Pickman.

With a large gathering of clergymen and delegates in the First Congregational church the 48th annual meeting of the American Missionary association, the greatest missionary body in the Congregational denomination, opened this afternoon. On the platform were Pres. Merrill E. Gates, L.L.D., of Amherst college, Rev. Dr. Boynton of Boston, Rev. Dr. J. M. Greene of Lowell, Deacon Holmes of New Jersey, and other members of the executive committee.

After an organ voluntary by Solon W. Stevens, Rev. Dr. Horton of Providence read the scripture and offered prayer. Then came the address of welcome by Hon. John J. Pickman, mayor, in which he eulogized the association, its aims, work and accomplishment. He said that two golden words in our language are home and welcome, and the latter is written in golden letters over the gates of our city.

In closing he welcomed the association to the place where John Eliot did home mission work among the Indians, and to a city the ground of which was consecrated by the earliest missionaries.

Pres. Gates made an eloquent response of some length reviewing the work of the body for the past year.

The Treasurer's Report.

Next came the treasurer's report, which in substance was as follows;

Expenditures—In the south, $243,234.03; among the Indians, $43,340.30; among the Chinese, $13,200.75; for foreign missions, $4,828.80; total, $304,810.27; which with other expenditures, amounting to $301,502.66, made the grand total of $466,330.77.

ATTENDANCE FALLS FAR BELOW POINT REACHED LAST YEAR.

In the High School the Average Age of Pupils is Higher Than Before While at all Schools the Prospects are good for Greater Interest on the Part of Those Attending.

The free evening schools of the city opened last evening for the winter term. The opening was not so encouraging or auspicious, in point of attendance of pupils, as last year. Every evening last week, the schools were opened for registration of pupils, and the reports from the different schools are not so gratifying as might be expected.

Registration for the different schools was as follows:

High, 743; Green, 350; Bartlett, 201; Aiken Avenue, 102; Mann and Worthen Street, 184; High Street, 20; Butler, 85; Franklin, 164; Edson, 103; Varnum, 108; Colburn, 132; total, 2,192. Supervisor Smith says that the total registration is about 500 below last year's attendance, and unless there is a marked increase during the week some of the rooms will be closed, and a number of teachers dropped.

At the schools about all who were registered reported and received their first instruction of the term. In the Worthen street school there are about 80 Portuguese and Armenian pupils endeavoring to master the English language.

At the Green school the register contained about 150 names less than there were pupils in the school last year. There was also a falling off in the Butler school where only 85 pupils had made application and twelve temporary teachers were in attendance. A somewhat similar condition of affairs existed in the Varnum school.

The high school was crowded, the attendance being considerably larger than last year, and in fact larger than any previous year, with the prospect of increasing before the end of the week. One gratifying thing here is that the pupils are older in years and seem to be more intent on their object of attending school.

Over in the Colburn school, there is a class of Armenians taught by one of their own nationality. The Edson school remains about the same as last year, in point of numbers, there being already 108 pupils for the six teachers.

The drawing and modelling classes in the Mann school, were well patronized, and will undoubtedly increase its membership, as it has done in previous years.

The teachers who were in charge of the schools last evening have been placed there temporarily and are subject to confirmation or rejection by the school board at its next meeting. It may be that some of them will be dropped unless the attendance picks up considerably.

It is expected that the committee on evening schools will pay an official visit to the schools shortly.

KNOX WILL be heard in self defence tonight.

THE REPUBLICANS will have a calamity gathering at Huntington hall tonight.

E. W. RODGERS does not seem to be very much afraid of getting into jail since he tackles the county sheriff.

THE EVENING schools have started up. Manual training is being neglected because of the dead lock in the board.

WILL THE board of trade please devise means of reducing the city's interest account? That will secure all the economic reforms needed.

PETER A. FAY is getting out a lot of circulars exposing the administration of the county ring. He will stir up the taxpayers to a sense of duty.

THE FIRST Chinese victory is reported from Chinese sources. The Celestial troops must have gotten into a fortification from which there was no escape.

MR. FOSS dicovers that the license commission will not redeem his promises and he cannot fulfill them himself. What a pickle. Goodness gracious "what's to be did?"

REV. HUGH MONTGOMERY denies the accuracy of the A. P. A. expose published in the Boston Post last Friday. He must know the oaths of this dark lantern order when he is able to say what they are not.

THE BOARD OF TRADE is pushing forward in its proposed mission of municipal reform. The plan to put the management of streets, sewers and commons in the hands of the city engineer is not considered a wise one; it is not favored by the tax payers to any extent and some go so far as to say it is all a scheme to benefit certain land owners in Ward Four. It would be better by far to place the necessary power in the hands of the chief executive to see that the work of these departments be carried out effectively. Had the mayor the power to suspend or remove heads of departments for mismanagement or incompetency the whole problem would be solved.

STAMP OUT HOODLUMISM.

The death of Patrick Buckley as a result of injuries sustained in being struck by a missile thrown by a desperado should be a lesson to the police.

It is high time that more active steps were taken to restrain hoodlumism. It is not uncommon to find a number of toughs parading the streets at night, swearing among themselves and at passers by, throwing stones at inoffensive people, attacking women and children and in a thousand ways making themselves a pest to the community.

The police have not dealt with the hoodlums as they should have done. It is time that Chief Davis would change his policy in regard the element that pervades streets and alleys at night ready to commit any kind of depredation or assault. They have been tolerated too long and Buckley's death is an object lesson that should arouse the police to a sense of their duty in the matter. It is reported by an eye witness that an officer was asked to arrest one of the stone throwers while within his reach but instead of doing so he stood still as if afraid to move or unwilling to risk the ordeal. Was it cowardice or stupidity that pinned the officer to the ground when he should have made an effort to catch the man who had attempted to kill another with a missile? This question interests the public because an officer that lets such occurrences take place under his very eye is not the kind of a man who will check hoodlumism.

THE CENTRAL Labor Union has endorsed Hon. Peter J. Brady for senator. Judging from his record in the legislature one might suppose the vote would be unanimous because he lost no opportunity of advancing every labor measure as far as lay in his power. To support a populist candidate would be the height of ingratitude as well as a direct blow at the interests of labor because there is no hope of electing any populist candidate. Mr. Connolly, Mr. Weeks and other men identified with the populist party are in full sympathy with organized labor. In fact they spend much of their time working in its behalf; but if they were a thousand times more valuable, a vote given to either would be thrown away so far as the chance of electing either candidate is concerned. While the contest between Brady and Foss will be very close a small number of votes taken from Brady or from the democratic strength and given to a third party candidate will be just so much in Foss's favor.

THE DEMOCRATS of the Fifth district are confident of electing Mr. Fifield to congress. They like his democracy, they like his record as an employer of labor and they like his tariff policy which is to let it alone for the present. Many republicans have the same sentiment in regard to Mr. Fifield's candidacy so that the prospect of a solid majority is very encouraging.

A TYPHOID epidemic on. Is this from the contamination of Hale's brook, from the Merrimack river water or from bad vaults? Will the board of health or the water board please answer?

THE McKINLEY croakers complain about a reduction in prices of the necessaries of life. The cost of living has come down and will be lower still. That is a benefit to the people.

COLD THAT BURNS.

Its Effects Are Not Very Different From Scorching by Heat.

Burning is usually associated with heat, and it seems a misnomer to speak of cold burns. Chemists tell us that there is really no such thing as cold, which is relative heat, and that the lowest temperature yet registered is some degrees above absolute cold.

At a meeting of the Swiss Society of Natural Sciences at Lausanne M. Raoul Pictet gave some particulars concerning cold burns experienced by himself and assistants during his investigations of the lowest temperature attainable. There are two degrees of burns. In one case the skin reddens at first and turns blue the following day, and subsequently the area of the spot expands until it becomes nearly double its original dimensions. The "burn," which is usually not healed until five or six weeks after its occurrence, is accompanied by a very painful itching on the affected spot and the surrounding tissues. When the burning is more serious, produced by longer contact with the cold body, a burn of the second degree is experienced. In this case the skin is rapidly detached, and all parts reached by the cold behave like foreign bodies. A long and stubborn suppuration sets in, which does not seem to accelerate the reconstitution of the tissues. The wounds are malignant and sear very slowly in a manner entirely different from burns produced by fire.

On one occasion, when M. Pictet was suffering from a severe burn due to a drop of liquid air, he accidentally scorched the same hand very seriously. The scorched portion was healed in 10 or 12 days, but the wound produced by the cold burn was open for upward of six months. In order to try the effect of radiation in dry cold air M. Pictet held his bare arm up to the elbow in a refrigerating vessel maintained at 105 degrees. when a sensation of a peculiarly distinct character was felt over the whole skin and throughout the muscles. At first this sensation was not disagreeable, but gradually it became decidedly so, and after three or four minutes the skin turned blue, and the pain became more intense and deep seated. On withdrawing the arm from the refrigerator at the end of ten minutes a strong reaction was experienced, accompanied by a superficial inflammation of the skin.—Newcastle Chronicle.

The Safer Way.

Colonel Corkscrough was a dignified citizen, with a blooming red nose, and while he had his weaknesses he was held to be scrupulously honest. One day a business man called him into his office.

"Colonel," he said, "I want to leave a valuable package with you for a week or so."

"Very good, sir," replied the colonel. "Where is it?"

"It's here in my desk. I want to say to you that it is a gallon of whisky. Are you to be trusted with it?"

The colonel's face flushed.

"My honor's at stake, sir," he returned haughtily.

The colonel's eyes shone.

The man took the demijohn out, and the colonel inspected it carefully and satisfied himself that it was as represented. Then he set it down on the floor.

"Excuse me, sir," he said slowly, "but I think you had better store that in the vault of the safe deposit company."—Detroit Free Press.

It is a village on a Bengalese highway, a village of 30 or 40 huts strung out in line, with the jungle for a background and the wretched dwellings almost hidden from sight by a row of trees along the road. It is high noon now, and as we rest under a tree and look into the village a procession of people comes toward us. It is not a funeral procession, not a march, not a band going out to work or worship. It is the flight of 200 panic stricken men, women and children. Each one bears a burden, and each one looks around in apprehension and increases his pace as the village is left behind. Are they flying from fever or cholera or dread of a jungle fire which may surround them? Have they heard that a band of robbers is lurking in the tangled forest beyond their patty fields, waiting for night to come to descend upon the village and rob the people even of their ragged loin clothes? Is there danger that a storm away up in the hills will overflow the ditches and drown out the village?

No, it is nothing they fear, and yet it is something they fear worse than death itself. Only an hour ago a native runner entered the village, pale and breathless, to announce that a man eating tiger had taken up his quarters on the highway between that and the village five miles to the north. It is not fear, but apprehension, a nervous terror, a feeling of helplessness, which has sent them flying. Where to? No one knows nor cares nor has considered that question. The idea is to be miles away before the sun goes down and the man eater is ready to go in search of his evening meal. He may seek it in that village, in the other, in one a dozen miles away. The man eater may crouch in one spot for hours, waiting for a victim to pass, or he may roam the country over from dark to dawn. It is not this village alone. The people are flying from four others in the same panic stricken manner. Seven hundred men, women and children leaving home behind, 1,000 acres of crops left to ripen and rot, because a man eater is abroad, and no one knows who will be his next victim, although the Bengalese believe that one's days are numbered, and that death must come when the mark has been reached. An hour after the flight the vultures and hyenas are fighting over the spoils left behind.

The sun hastens into the west, sinks lower and lower, and by and by the red ball of fire drops out of sight, and darkness comes. There is no twilight, no glooming. Five minutes ago it was daylight. Now it is night. Two miles to the north a nullah or creek comes down from the east and crosses the highway. It flows in the bed of a ravine choked with bush and brier and plant and creeper, and there is so little water that there is no bridge over the highway. Once over the highway it flows into another ravine, equally dark and gloomy, and 100 miles away its waters find a great river. At the first notes of the night birds the man eater is aroused. His lair is a mile from the highway and in a tangle so thick that men might have looked for him in vain. He wakes from his deep sleep with dry lips and parched tongue, and he whines and complains as he creeps down to the brook and searches for a pool into which to plunge his head until it is almost immersed. He drinks long and deep, like a horse which has traversed the desert from dawn to dark. When his thirst is at last satisfied, he stretches himself, growls his satisfaction and turns and faces down the ravine. There is nothing left of the man he killed the night before. What he did not eat the jackals were waiting to devour. He is hungry again, and he must kill to live.

With a footfall as soft as that of a rabbit, though betraying his presence every minute or two by an angry snarl at bush or rock or gliding serpent, the man eater makes his way down the ravine. At the highway, before he breaks cover, he listens to the north and the south to learn if anything is moving. There is no one to see him, nothing to disturb him, and with a couple of bounds and a catlike hiss he is across the road and hidden in bushes beyond. He turns as he enters the bushes and faces the road and his lair. It is the craft of the man eater to do this, to face in the direction he means to drag his victim. An hour goes by. Two hours slip away. The people have been warned, and not a human being has traveled this road since the sun was within an hour of setting. The man eater has settled himself down with many a complaining growl and whine, but not to sleep while he waits. His ears work nervously, and his eyes blaze, and his tail quivers as he bides his time.

A belated villager, who has been to a distant market, with his produce loaded on the back of a patient, lumbering ox—he has not heard of the man eater, of the flight of his family and friends. He rides the ox as he returns. He fears there may be a tiger or panther lurking along the highway, and when not absolutely quiet he is whispering prayers for protection. The tiger hears the step of the ox a long way off. His keen sighted eyes tell him in the darkness what is approaching. The ox advances with a plod, plod, plod, looking furtively to right and left at intervals, but scenting no danger. He comes to the creek, swallows the cud he has been chewing as he plodded along and lowers his head to drink. As suddenly as the report of a gun reaches one's ears, he hears an angry roar, feels sharp claws pricking his flesh, and as he rushes up the road through the darkness he is alone. The tiger's spring was not for him. Before the ox has galloped a mile the man eater has dragged his victim half way up the ravine to the spot where we found him as the sun went down. He will feast again tonight and sleep away the morrow.

Painted Arab Girls.

Shiof is a very picturesque spot perched on a rock, with towers and turrets constructed of sun dried brick, only here, as elsewhere in these valleys, the houses are so exactly the same color as the rock behind them that they lose their effect. The rich have evidently recognized this difficulty and whitewash their houses, but in the poorer villages there is no whitewash, and consequently nothing to make them stand out from their surroundings. Arab girls before they enter the harem and take the veil are a curious sight to behold. Their bodies and faces are dyed a bright yellow with turmeric. On this ground they paint black lines with antimony over their eyes. The fashionable color for the nose is red, green spots adorn the cheek, and the general aspect is grotesque beyond description.

It is the universal female dress in Hadramut and looks as if the fashion had not changed since the days when Hazarmaveth, the patriarch, settled in this valley and gave it his name (Genesis x, 28). The tall, tapering straw hat worn by these women when in the fields contributes with the mask to make the Hadrami females as externally repulsive as the most jealous of husbands could desire.—Nineteenth Century.

Painted Like a Ruffian.

Caravaggio was originally a hod carrier and was afterward employed by the painters in the Vatican to grind their colors. He was fond of depicting scenes in low life, and it was said of him that he painted like a ruffian because he was a ruffian. His "Entombment of Christ," in the Vatican, was modeled on the funeral of a gypsy chief.—Exchange.

"Amaraca's Greatest Bootblack" is the sign displayed by a colored bootblack on Eighth avenue, New York city. Perhaps he builded better than he knew, for the name is very close to what some modern geographers say was its original form.

THE POLITICAL POT

Boiling Over in the Great Empire State.

BOTH PARTIES HUSTLING WITH ALL THEIR ENERGY.

The Fight Fiercely Waged in New York City.

NEW YORK, Oct. 23.—The Republican managers of the state campaign, while actively at work pushing the canvass in all parts of the state, say they are unable to find any distressing indications in the ranks, and in serene confidence are watching the attempts of their Democratic adversaries to adjust and harmonize the factional disturbances with which they are beset on all sides, especially in this city.

Ex-President Harrison will arrive here later in the week to attend to some private business, and while he is in the city it is Chairman Hackett's intention to arrange, if possible, a mammoth meeting, at which the ex-president will speak, and at which his former running mate, Mr. Morton, now the Republican candidate for governor, will be present.

Senator Hill spoke at Yonkers last night. He will speak at Brooklyn this afternoon and in New York and this vicinity until Friday, when he will return to the interior of the state. A great deal will depend upon the result of his visit and the conference he has with the state and local leaders.

The situation so far as the New York city and Brooklyn Democratic candidates for congress and assembly are concerned is very critical, with county Democratic candidates opposing the Tammany congressional and assembly candidates in this city, and Shepard candidates running against the regular nominees in the Brooklyn districts, save that represented by Coombs. There are nine congressional districts in this city and five in Brooklyn. The opposition of the county Democratic candidates of from one to four Tammany candidates in this city, and the Shepardites endanger four in the districts in Brooklyn.

As the margin by which the Democratic managers hope to carry the next house of representatives is very narrow, the situation is regarded as extremely grave at Democratic headquarters. All efforts heretofore made toward harmonizing differences to prevent the possibility of Republicans slipping in through Democratic divisions have proved ineffectual. Senator Faulkner, chairman of the congressional campaign committee, will be here again tomorrow to witness the result of the present effect.

Richard Croker and Perry Belmont, Mr. Cleveland's ex-minister to Spain, were at the Democratic headquarters yesterday regarding this matter. The rumor was rife and apparently well-founded that ex-Mayor Grace, who is at the head of the county Democracy organization, was willing to compromise on the basis of withdrawing the county Democracy candidates in seven of the New York city districts, if Tammany would withdraw ex-Senator Cantor in the Fifteenth and John Connolly in the Fourteenth, in order to give Robert Grier Monroe and Dewitt Warner clear fields.

The Tammany candidates for congress and for the assembly were represented as recalcitrant to Senator Hill. Mr. Croker and other leaders were said to be advising a policy of concession, but Lieutenant Governor Sheehan said last evening that no basis of agreement had yet been reached.

Hill Smoothing Difficulties.

At headquarters it was said that Senator Hill's campaigning trip in the state had been very successful in conciliating the opposing Democratic factions. Wherever possible, the Hill partisans were kept in the background, and the Cleveland Democrats managed the receptions and meetings.

Chairman Thatcher still insists that President Cleveland will speak in no uncertain tone at the right time. It is an open secret that a letter written by Judge Maynard, the unsuccessful Democratic candidate for supreme judge last year, detailing the manner in which his nomination was brought about and acquitting Senator Hill of responsibility therefor, is in existence, and it will probably be given out shortly.

Lieutenant Governor Sheehan gave out an interview in reply to the charges of colonization of voters made by the Republicans, in which he makes counter charges against them. He says that the Democratic committee have been repeatedly warned of the Republican colonization schemes, receiving such information from railroad officials and in other reliable manner.

A Question For the Courts.

NEW YORK, Oct. 23.—There is a deadlock over the Simpson-Campbell congressional fight. When the question was considered the Tammany commissioners offered a resolution recognizing Simpson as the Republican candidate from the Ninth district. This was lost, the Republican commissioners voting negatively. Then the Republican commissioners offered a resolution recognizing Campbell. This, too, was lost. The matter will now have to be decided by the courts.

Abbett Declines to Run.

CAMDEN, N. J., Oct. 23.—Hon. Leon Abbett has come out with a letter in which he upsets the calculations of the Democratic leaders in New Jersey by announcing that he is not a candidate for United States senator.

Tammanyite Withdraws.

NEW YORK, Oct. 23. — Timothy "Dry Dollar" Sullivan has filed with the commissioners the declination of Philip Wissig as Tammany candidate for assemblyman from the Third district.

Suicide by Fire.

HUDSON, N. Y., Oct. 23.—Mrs. Phoebe Mortison of West Lebanon committed suicide by saturating her clothing with kerosene and setting fire to it. Her husband ran to her rescue and his hands were so severely burned that amputation of the fingers of both will be necessary.

All Are Well.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 23.—The schoolship Saratoga has arrived at the Delaware Breakwater. The vessel has been on her cruise since early spring. All on board are well.

Alleged Forger Captured.

Why Not.

HERMIT OF SAN CLEMENTS.

San Clemente island, which lies 60 miles west one-half south of Point Loma lighthouse, on the southern coast of California, is 18½ miles long, with an average width of 2½ miles and an area of 51½ square miles. It is a lonesome spot, suggestive of Spanish buccaneers and pirates generally. It rears its ugly head of black plutonic rock nearly 2,000 feet above the sea level, and in the deep gulches treasures a few sumac trees as a miser guards his gold. Cactus abounds. Natural water tanks in the rock are found on the edges of the plateaus. They were worn by rocks whirled around in holes during heavy rainfalls. The water in these tanks has saved the lives of many a thirsty mariner who has put in there for a supply of the life giving fluid. It was here that Cabrillo landed in October, 1542, after discovering San Diego harbor. He named the island La Victoria, after one of his smaller ships, the present name having been given a century later.

There is but one human being on San Clemente, the hermit herder, Tom Gallagher. Tom is a character with a history. His shaggy head and beard and curious attire give him the look of a savage, but Tom is very much of a white man in his heart, even though he has lived alone with his sheep for over 20 years. Occasionally a straggling junk seeking abalone, or now and then a fisherman, stops in the cave of San Clemente, brings Tom the news and furnishes him with supplies. To loosen Tom's tongue the explorer must have handy a chew of tobacco and a drink of whisky. He has a favorite water tank somewhere, but he never tells its location. Whisky is a novelty to this hermit, but it never causes him to forget himself sufficiently to reveal the details of his mainland life. He was a fisherman somewhere between San Diego and Monterey bay. He had good prospects, but one day he took it into his head to live alone on San Clemente. That is about all that Tom will say of himself.

There are people who claim to know Tom's history, and it is a romantic story, they say, with a love affair in it, of course. The woman jilted him, and he sought the island cloister. Tom lives in a comfortable hut, with a vegetable patch, chickens, a goat and his sheep. His is a regular Robinson Crusoe outfit, except that there is no man Friday to serve him. This lord of San Clemente does not want servants. He simply wants to be let alone, with only his animals and his gun for companions. —San Francisco Chronicle.

WORSE THAN HADES.

Terrible Fate of a Man Who Could Not Enter Heaven.

Mrs. Blank went shopping. Mr. Blank went with her. No one can explain just why he went, for she didn't positively compel it, and he is still regarded as sane! He went anyhow.

She wanted buttons. Those at Jenkins' store were too small, much too small. So she went to Kahn's and Poznanski's and the Merchants' Supply, then to Poznanski's and the Merchants' Supply and Kahn's. At Jenkins' again they showed her the same buttons, and she found them too large. Blank guessed it a case of expansion caused by the heat. It seemed hot to him. She got almost to another place, not quite, for they saw her coming and locked up for the night. So she went home.

That night Blank's hard breathing woke his wife, so she woke him in turn.

"What's the matter?" she demanded.

"I—I had a dreadful dream," he gasped. "I thought we were both dead, that you had gone to heaven, and that I—I hadn't!"

"How perfectly awful," she cried, grasping him convulsively around the neck, "to be separated, and"—

"We—we weren't separated," moaned Blank, with a shudder. "I—I could have endured that! But no—no, I dreamed you were to be allowed to go shopping forever, and that I was condemned to go with you!"—Kate Field's Washington.

Next to Ham.

They tell a pretty good story of a tourist who ventured beyond Deadwood. He was determined to see all there was that could be called wild and woolly and immediately demanded to know where he could ride on a real stagecoach. The Deadwood stagecoaches of dime novel fame are rotting, unused and unhonored, on the sides of the hills, but a stage line still runs between Deadwood and Spearfish. Perched beside the driver of this stage, the tourist was delighted to find that this man had really driven a coach in the good old days. All efforts to draw out some story or even a sage remark which could be carefully treasured and repeated were failures. They were bowling along the side of a creek, and the tourist finally said:

No response.

"Isn't there trout in this stream?"

"Umph!"

"Fine fish, sir."

No response.

"Don't you like trout?" asked the traveler in desperation, turning in his seat in a way that demanded an answer.

"Next to ham," was the surly response.

The astonished tourist was delighted with the result of his efforts when he finally figured out that ham was once a luxury and trout an everyday diet in that country.—Chicago Tribune.

She Shared Lola's Bonbons.

A west side belle has as a pet a fine greyhound which answers to the name of Lola. One of the young woman's many admirers recently sent her a large box of very choice bonbons of a more than usually expensive brand. The pert young miss acknowledged them as follows:

DEAR MR. ——: Thanks for those delicious bonbons. Lola and I are enjoying them together.

To this the young man promptly replied:

DEAR MISS ——Of course you are most welcome to the bonbons, and I'm glad you like them, but as a matter of fact they were intended for Lola exclusively.

And now the west side belle doesn't speak to him, and she has confided to Lola that he is a horrid man anyhow.—New York Herald.

The Second Marriage.

A quiet wedding either at home or church is in every way the most suitable for a woman about to be married the second time. And she should not, under any circumstances, wear either a white gown, a veil or orange blossoms. A costume of pale gray or a delicate lilac would be both pretty and suitable.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Most of the so called marble houses of the Rome of Augustus were not such in reality. The plasterer's art had then reached a high state of perfection and gave to stucco the appearance of the finest marble.

Somewhat In the Same Line.

"Beg pardon, sir," said the passenger in the skullcap, tired of the monotony of the journey and desirous of scraping an acquaintance with the man in the next seat, "are you traveling for some house?"

"No, sir," replied the other. "I am not in business. I am a Universalist preacher."

ENGLISH ON THE TONGUE.

There are few words in the English language of such comprehensive appropriateness as the word "things." We put on and take off "things." We put down and take up "things." We walk over "things" and pick "things" up and put "things" away. We love "things" and hate "things" and consider "things" and think about "things." We look beyond the "things" seen to the "things" not seen. And these are "things" temporal, and those are "things" eternal.

And each and every one of these "things" has a different significance and belongs to a different class. There are material "things" among them and immaterial "things." They are physical and mental, of heaven and earth, of time and of eternity. A word of no special definition, it designates everything in turn, for it may be anything, it may be nothing.

It is a facile snare to the slipshod writer. Dilating on the beauties of "everything," this "lovely thing" or that "exquisite thing" tempts him to rest satisfied with the yielding expression which saves search for a more specific word. It is the ready recourse of the shallow clatterer, who calls her friend a "sweet thing" as frequently as she speaks of her enemy as a "spiteful thing." It is the refuge of the lazy, the negligent, the ignorant talker of any age, to whom the proper names of articles are superfluous so long as the word "things" exists in the dictionary.

So universally misused, abused and overworked is this general term that Harper's Bazar advises as "the proper thing" under the circumstances to ignore it so far as possible in our own conversation and in the talk of other people and to insist that ideas be conveyed by words which mean exactly what is intended to be expressed, instead of by a word which means anything or nothing at all.

Most persons who use the word "trolley" do not know the origin of this term or why this name was given to the apparatus by which the electricity is conveyed from an overhead wire. It is traced as follows by Golden Days:

Twenty years ago the word was used to designate "a form of truck which can be tilted for carrying railroad materials or the like." This is the only definition of the word in Webster's dictionary of the edition of 1848. In the edition of 1892 of the same work three other definitions are added: 1. "A narrow cart that is pushed by hand or drawn by an animal." It is noted that this meaning of the word is in use in England, not in the United States. 2. "A truck from which the load is suspended on some kinds of cranes." This meaning is technical, according to Webster, and employed only in speaking of machinery. 3. "(Electric railway.) A truck which travels along the fixed conductors and forms a means of connection between them and a railway car."

It is easy to see how the primitive form of the electric trolley, which travels upon the wires, came to receive its name from its resemblance to other types of trolley, and the name, having been immediately given to this primitive form, was naturally retained when the method of connection was changed from a little truck moving on a wire to a mast having at its end a wheel pressing on the lower surface of the wire.

An Interesting Fact.

Some captious critics have wondered why Longfellow selected a chestnut tree as the one of all others which overshadowed the village smithy in his famous poem. These critics are probably unaware that the poet had a twofold reason for so doing, says the London Ironmonger. In the first place, the chestnut is among the most umbrageous of trees, and in the second place the horse chestnut bears on every twig near the "milky cones" at blooming time the imprint in miniature of a horseshoe, perfect in shape and including the nails. It is only reasonable to suppose that the original idea of the horseshoe was taken from this curious feature of the chestnut tree, and that is no doubt why the American poet—who, like Tennyson, was a deep student of botany—selected the chestnut as the tree most appropriate to overspread the smithy of the village blacksmith.

The Steam Power of the World.

From figures credited to the bureau of statistics in Berlin it appears that of the steam engines now working in the world four-fifths have been constructed during the last 25 years. France has 79,590 stationary and locomotive boilers; Germany, 59,000 land boilers, 1,700 ship boilers and 10,000 locomotives; Austria, 12,000 boilers and 2,800 locomotives. The working steam engines of the United States represent 7,500,000 horsepower; of England, 7,000,000 horsepower; Germany, 4,500,000 horsepower; France, 3,000,000 horsepower; Austria, 1,500,000 horsepower. This estimate does not include the locomotives, whose number in the world is 105,000, representing a total of 3,000,000 horsepower. The world's steam engines, therefore, aggregate more than [illegible],000,000 horsepower, equivalent approximately to the work of 1,000,000,000 men.

The "Wabbling" of the North Pole.

It has long been known that the earth's axis varies in an irregular way as regards its relation to fixed objects in space, but it is now reported as the result of recent observations that the earth's axis is a bit loose as regards the globe itself. The effect is that the north pole wabbles slightly. The variation in position is not over 50 feet, however, so there is no danger that any explorers who have gone to the arctic regions without this warning will get hurt by going too near.

Buried Head to the West.

An old custom prevails in some sections at the present day of burying a dead body with the head to the west. The original reason was that the dead may face to the east when the judgment day comes. A story is told to the effect that the first preacher at Easthampton, N. Y., directed that he be buried facing the west, that he might face his congregation at the day of judgment. He died 200 years ago and more.

A Large Chime of Bells.

The largest chime of bells said to have ever been made in this country has been ordered for St. James' church, Chicago, according to an exchange. It will be made in Baltimore and contain 17 bells, the largest weighing 5,000 pounds, and the total weight of the bells and fixtures will be over 25 tons.

ODD NEW YORK ORDINANCES.

The Chapter on Nuisances Contains Many Interesting Requirements.

Some of the local regulations under which New Yorkers live which it is a legal offense to violate or ignore are of a peculiar character. What is known as article 24 of the Revised Ordinances—the chapter on nuisances—is perhaps the most peculiar of all. Any person, it says, who shall permit any bear or other noxious or dangerous animal to run at large, or who shall lead any such animal with chain or rope or other appliance, whether such animal be muzzled or unmuzzled, in any street, avenue, lane, highway or public place within the corporate limits of New York shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. Any person, says section 240 of this chapter, who shall raise or fly any kite in any street, lane, avenue or public place south of Fourteenth street shall be fined $5. No goat shall be permitted to go at large on any street, avenue, lane, alley, pier or wharf under penalty of "$3 for every such goat found at large, to be paid by the owner or by the person having charge, care or keeping of such goat."

As goats cannot be impounded, the arrest of a stray goat in conformity with the ordinance quoted, even if the goat's defense did not make such attempted action impracticable, would be an ill advised proceeding, as the board of aldermen has not provided any place to which an offending goat may be taken. Section 236 declares —same chapter of nuisances—that no person shall bring into the city of New York or have in his, her or their possession in said city any oysters between the 1st of May and the 1st of September in any year under penalty of a fine of $5. No person shall swim or bathe in any of the waters within the jurisdiction of New York, except in public or private bathing houses, unless covered with a bathing suit. No grocer, innkeeper, tavern keeper or any other person shall have in his, her or their premises any flying horse or horses or whirligig or roundabout or other machinery or device, by whatever name it may be called, under penalty of $50.

No person shall use or perform with or hire or procure or abet any other person to use or perform with any hand organ in any of the streets or public places of New York before the hour of 9 a. m. or after the hour of 7 p. m. each day, nor during any part of the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday. No person shall perform upon a hand organ except such organ is licensed, but it is a question which has not yet been settled whether, in the view of the board of aldermen, a man who procures or abets another to play upon an unlicensed organ becomes per se an accessory before or after, and subject, therefore, to a fine of $2.75, more or less.

No person shall beat any drum or instrument for the purpose of attracting the attention of passengers in any street or lane of New York to any show of beasts or bird or other things in this city. No person shall place or suspend or cause or procure to be placed or suspended in or over any street of New York any cloth, yarn or garment for the purpose of drying the same under the penalty of $10. No person shall expose in any street, lane or avenue in New York any table or device upon which or by which a game of chance or hazard can be played.

The Fur Seal.

The fur seal—its name should be furry sea lion—is the most celebrated of all our fur bearers, and the United States government has been as active in protecting it from destruction as it was indifferent to the fate of the buffalo millions. If our great international dispute with England and Canada over the fur seal had arisen 70 years ago, before the days of peaceful arbitration, there would surely have been a war over it. Nor is our interest in our fur seal to be wondered at when we stop to consider that from 1870 to 1890 our national treasury received $6,000,000 from the Alaska Commercial company as royalty on the animals killed—six-sevenths of the purchase price of Alaska.

When to this we add the amount received in a 20 per cent import duty on the dressed skins as they came back to us from the English dyers, the total revenue derived from the fur seal in 20 years amounts to the enormous sum of $8,500,000. Such an animal was worth saving from destruction. No other animal ever became such a bone of contention between two great nations for a long period, the discussion winding up with a high and mighty conference of arbitration.

As usual, the whole trouble arose through the greediness of a few irresponsible and lawless individuals. The sealers of the Pacific coast insisted upon taking fur seals by shooting them in the open sea, by which wasteful process seven were lost for every three secured. But if it were not for the loss of money revenue derived from this animal, it is quite certain the government would have allowed the wasteful slaughter to go on until the last seal was dead.—St. Nicholas.

Well Named.

The simple process of discovering the meaning of a foreign word or phrase by virtue of its sound sometimes leads to peculiar results.

"Shure, an fwhat is this briggy brag the misthress is all the toime talkin to yez about an tellin yez to be so careful av it?" inquired the cook of the housemaid in a large family mansion. "Fwhat does briggy brag mane, Oi dunno?"

"It ain't briggy brag; it's bricky brack," returned the housemaid moodily, "an Oi'm thinkin if 'twas yersilf had the care av it yez wouldn't be long feindin out fwhat it meant. It's Frinch for breakety break, that's what it is. It's a lot av little ornamints an joogs an vases jist made fer ketchin in the dusther an draggin thimselves off outer the floor an smashin into bits befoor a poor harrd wurrkin gell's oiyes. That's what bricky brack manes, an a good name it is for the whole lot av 'em!"—Youth's Companion.

One of California's Sylvan Giants.

"Goliath," one of the largest of the famous "big trees" of California, measures 23 feet in diameter at the ground and 20½ feet eight feet higher up. "Goliath" is perfectly healthy and solid throughout. It has been estimated that this forest giant, denuded of his branches, would weigh 100,000 tons, and that it would "saw" 2,000,000 feet of clear lumber. The branches and tops would make not less than 100 cords of wood. Heller estimates the weight of its leaves alone at 2½ tons. —St. Louis Republic.

Unfair Reasoning.

He—I'm going to ask you a favor.

She—It is granted before you ask it.

He (triumphantly)—Well, I was going to ask you for a kiss.

She (breaking away)—Wait a minute. I said it was granted before you asked for it. So you must have had it.—New York Herald.

"Waiter!" sharply called out Rivers, who was dining at a restaurant. "I called for ham and eggs, and you've brought me roast beef! Hasn't this institution a —a managing editor?"

"Yes, sah," replied the waiter, proceeding stiffly to gather up the rejected dish. "But this belongs to the department of the exchange editor, sah."—Chicago Tribune.

DONOVAN ROSSA

Hastened Back to America by His Wife.

HE WANTS TO KNOW WHO UHL IS

Airs His Grievance in a Letter to Cleveland.

NEW YORK, Oct. 23.—Edwin F. Uhl, assistant secretary of state at Washington, has declared that O'Donovan Rossa is not a citizen of the United States, although he has been voting here for a number of years on papers granted by Judge Larremore in the court of common pleas on Feb. 21, 1871. Mr. Uhl holds that these papers are worthless, on the ground that the qualification of five years' continuous residence was not complied with.

O'DONOVAN ROSSA.

Mr. Uhl's ruling on this subject accounts for Mr. Rossa's return from Europe last spring earlier than he intended. Uhl refused to grant him a passport, and he did not, in consequence, visit Scotland and England, where he intended to deliver some lectures. Rossa has sent a letter to President Cleveland reciting the facts in the case.

Before going to Europe last May, Rossa wrote to Mr. Uhl for a passport. This was refused. In his letter to Mr. Cleveland, Mr. Rossa says:

Complains to Cleveland.

"President Cleveland, who is this Mr. Uhl whom you have around you as president of your passport bureau in Washington? I have suffered somewhat by the refusal of Mr. Uhl to send me a passport when I was going to Europe last May. I had engagements made to give some lectures in Ireland, England and Scotland. I made arrangements to sail on the Campania from New York on May 19. On May 15 I wrote for the passport. It did not come before the 19th. I sailed on the 19th.

"On May 23 my wife got Mr. Uhl's letter refusing me a passport, and telling her I was no citizen of the United States. That letter threw her into sickness. She wrote to me telling me not to go into England or Scotland; that she had reasons for telling me so, and asking that I come back to America as soon as I had filled my engagements in Ireland. My wife bosses me, and I obeyed her orders.

Going Into Details.

"Who is this Mr. Uhl? And do you say that my citizen papers are bad? I lived here; did business here in New York in the year 1863. Barney Ryan, a deputy sheriff here now in New York, lived in the same house with me at Madison and New Chambers streets. Three brothers of mine were in the war. That year I took out my first papers. In July, 1865, I left New York for Ireland. In September, 1865, I was returning to America. On Friday evening of Sept. 15 I was packing my trunk, as I was to leave the cove of Cork for America the following Sunday.

"The soldiers of the English government in Ireland arrested me and put me in prison, and kept me in English prisons up to January, 1871. Then the English sent me from Chatham prison to New York, and next month I went before Judge Larremore and told my story in the application I made for full papers of citizenship.

"He gave them to me by virtue of that clause of the constitution which says that the five years' "consecutive residence" in the United States holds good for the man who has taken out his first papers and leaves the country with the intention of returning, but who is detained in any manner that makes it impossible for him to return, and returns when he can."

LOCAL NEWS.

Be joyful and smoke Tower's corner.

The Misses McSorley were thrown from their team on Middlesex street, yesterday afternoon, but escaped with slight injuries.

The alarm from box 17 was occasioned by a blaze in an ash barrel in the house of J. A. Knowles, corner of Branch and Walker streets.

The ingrain weavers will hold their second social in Associate hall, Friday night, and if it is as successful as the previous one the hall will be crowded.

Notwithstanding the abundant warning that all water bills must be paid the present week there will be a score or more come under the shut-off penalty on next Monday. Strange fact, too.

Road Race on Saturday.

The Vesper road race will occur on Saturday at the boulevard. Afterwards there will be an eight mile race and entries can be made with A. E. Rhodes, Emil Hansen, and Dr. Snyder will act as handicapper.

School Board Will Meet.

The school committee will hold its regular meeting next Monday evening. The illness of George M. Harrigan will prevent his attendance, but he is paired with Rev Mr. Greene who will also be unable to be present.

Instruction For Our Teachers.

Miss W. Bertha Hintz, sketch artist of Boston, gave a lesson in sketch work, to the school teachers of this city in High school hall yesterday afternoon. Each teacher is provided with blackboard paper on which she sketches, and whatever work she does becomes her property. Miss Hintz will give a lesson each afternoon, excepting Saturday, this week.

She will also visit some of the schools during the week, and assist the teachers in sketch-work. She was secured to give these lessons by Supt Whitcomb, at a request of a number of the teachers.

Cash, Courage and Capacity.

Under this heading O'Sullivan Bros. announce in today's issue their great purchase of nearly 500 pairs of ladies' $5 kid button and lace boots at 40 per cent. reduction. In these days of large deals it is only the firm with large capacity, courage and cash that such inducements are offered to, as they only can handle them. In this case the ladies who wear fine shoes will have an opportunity to get fitted with $5 boots at $3, and, judging from the vast patronage O'Sullivan Bros. enjoy, even as large a purchase as 500 pairs won't last long. To even things up 140 pair men's $4 shoes are thrown in at $3.

THE PYTHIAN SWINDLER.

He Has Reaped Over $400 On His Bogus Drafts.

The man who has been swindling K. of P. lodges in New England and New York, is now operating in Pennsylvania, with the bogus drafts for sick benefits.

Master of Exchequer A. G. Prasser has written to Mr. Wright giving the following description of the swindler: About 5 feet 6 or 7 inches in height, medium build, dark complexion, small dark mustache, medium small hands, wore kid gloves, light brown overcoat and latest style hat. He "appeared much hurt when he could not get the order cashed."

Among the swindler's latest pilferings the following have been reported: Oct. 18, M. of E., C. S. Wise of Buehler lodge 209, Marysville, Perry Co., Pa., cashed order 565 on Wamesit lodge, dated Oct. 9, for $20, drawn in favor of George T. Curtin and giving the names of C. C. and K. R. S. of Wamesit lodge as C. A. Wilson and J. B. Swift.

W. J. Redfern of Wilmerding lodge No. 319, Wilmerding, Allegheny county, Pa., cashed a bogus order for $20 drawn in favor of Walter S. Mayo. This was prior to the 13th inst.

Under date of Oct. 17, H. E. Leader, K. of R. and S. of the Blair lodge, Altoona, Pa., writes that his lodge cashed a draft for $20 drawn in favor of Geo. T. Curtin. It was alleged draft 565 dated Oct. 9, and the officers names were given as at Buehler lodge.

On Saturday Wamesit lodge was drawn on through the First National bank for another bogus draft dated Sept. 24, cashed by Silver Cross lodge, Gloversville, N. Y., for the swindler, who there gave his name as J. F. Aldrich.

THE BOWLING ART

The Music hall bowling alleys in Providence, which are owned and controlled by Lowell parties, were opened with a great spread last evening.

Cards for the opening were issued and bowling was free during the evening. A Lowell delegation headed by Philip J. Farley, Esq., and John B. Swift went down yesterday morning.

The Miserables team was also present and showed the large audience who witnessed the practice play how the record breakers knock down the pins. It was a great night for the Lowell boys and they were on their mettle. The Continental orchestra of Providence gave an excellent concert during the evening. The large alleys were decorated with bunting and the national colors.

Besides bowling one may also enjoy a game of pool or billiards, for adjoining the alleys is a parlor containing ten tables.

The proprietors have been very fortunate in securing John J. Fallon, a former Lowell boy, as manager of the alleys. Mr. Fallon is very well known in this city, Boston and in fact throughout Eastern Massachusetts. He is always attentive to whatever business he undertakes, and his every effort is to advance the interests of his employer.

While in this city, he managed the Eagle shoe store on Dutton street and afterwards entered the employ of Dyer Bros., in So. Boston.

Low Scores Were Made.

Miss Tucker's Return.

One of the best pleased audiences seen in Music hall was present last night at the opening performance of Miss Ethel Tucker and her own company. "Our Ethel" must have felt a decided thrill as she came on the stage to see the host of friendly faces and hear the cordial welcome accorded her. She showed her appreciation of the reception for her work as the poor Cricket was equal to the best she has ever done in this city. In all the varying moods of the character she was equally at home and so closely was her audience interested that even when the curtain finally fell they wanted to call her out again. Her company is an excellent one, individually and collectively. The costumes, scenery and appointments are deserving of praise. "Fanchon" will be repeated tonight. Wilkie Collins famous play "The New Magdalen" will be the bill for Wednesday and Thursday nights. Also for special ladies reception matinee, Wednesday afternoon, when Miss Tucker will be glad to meet the ladies of Lowell, immediately after the matinee.

THE BUCKLEY INQUEST.

Judge Frye Listens to the Evidence in the Latest Manslaughter Case.

All last evening Judge Frye listened to evidence tending to throw light on the killing of Patrick Buckley, Saturday night. The inquest is not completed but it is thought that some very importance evidence was presented.

SOCIALISTIC LABOR.

The local people's party rallied to the number of 200 in Jackson hall last night. John J. Ryan of Lawrence presided and the gubernatorial candidate, David Taylor of Boston spoke, giving long and careful attention to socialism and its growth, arraigning the present political and economic systems, and scoring the capitalistic classes. His closing argument was that socialistic labor is a party through which the people can get their rights.

DEFINITE NEWS

Of the Czar's Condition is Hard to Find.

SOME RELIABLE OLD WORLD NEWSPAPER GOSSIP.

On the Future of Russia's Royal Family.

LONDON, Oct. 23.—In all the continental capitals and London there have been streams of callers—official dignitaries, aristocrats and humble people—at the Russian embassies. To these, however, little information concerning the czar was vouchsafed, and that little consisted of gloomy forebodings. Prayers and masses were unceasingly offered from St. Petersburg to Vladivostok.

A dispatch from St. Petersburg says that besides the offering of prayers for the recovery of the czar in all of the churches, the holy synod has ordered that there be prayers for the same end in the army and navy on board the vessels of the Russian Pacific and Mediterranean squadrons. Archbishop Moghileff has ordered prayers in all the Catholic churches.

The Times' Vienna correspondent telegraphs that it is announced from Sofia, Bulgaria, that no special services have been held there for the recovery of the czar. The clergy appear to have been instructed from headquarters.

The wild rumors reported from St. Petersburg were repeated yesterday in still wilder form. From Moscow comes a report that there are people there who insist that the czarewitch has refused to ascend the throne, and that the czar in order to compel him has ordered his marriage to Princess Alix. The Muscovites fear that should the rumors prove true, they will have to face the gravest peril possible. While the people crowd the churches to pray for the czar, the fears that the rumor has truth gives added fear for their petitions.

The question of succession still holds the principal place in the flood of statements, rumors and surmises. The Cologne Gazette prints a St. Petersburg telegram stating that the czar has given orders for a settlement of the succession to the imperial council. He has advised that Grand Duke George, his second son, should, on account of the state of his health, renounce his claim in favor of his brother, Grand Duke Michael, who ought to take the oath as the heir presumptive to the throne.

Czarewitch Is Obstinate.

The relations between the czar and czarewitch do not appear to be of the best. The statements, however, are unfounded that the czar had a heated quarrel with his son, which excited him in a manner dangerous to one of his condition.

Still it is no secret that the czarewitch does not care much about the throne, not on account of love affairs, but from observation of the continual excitement and terror in which his father lived. The suddenness of the crisis has served to intensify his aversion, yet nobody here believes he will execute his intention to renounce the throne.

I hear that preparations have been made to decrease the aversion of the czarewitch to succeed his father. It is stated that during the last three days he has signed all official documents, and that the czar has admonished him to attend to the advice of M. Bunge, president of the ministerial committee.

Princess Alix at Livadia.

Princess Alix arrived at Livadia last night. The czarina accompanied her to the chapel of the castle, where both prayed earnestly that the life of the czar be spared. The czarina looked careworn, but she walked without assistance. All the reports stating that her majesty has been stricken with paralysis are untrue.

The Berliner Tageblatt publishes a telegram from Livadia asserting that the betrothal of the czarewitch and Princess Alix will formally occur this evening, and the marriage take place tomorrow. This hastening of the ceremony is said to be rendered necessary by the rule of the Romanoff family compelling every heir apparent to marry before ascending the throne and to proclaim his successor.

On this account the proclamation of the nearest agnate, the Grand Duke Michael, as the ultimate heir apparent, is generally expected. Another rule in connection with the accession requires that when the oath of allegiance to the new czar is administered to the troops and officials an oath of fidelity to the heir apparent must be taken at the same time.

The Official Gazette announces that Princess Alix has arrived at Livadia, but does not publish a word about her marriage. From what I hear, no marriage is likely now, but there will be a formal betrothal, and the benediction of the czar under the circumstances will bind the princess and the czarewitch until the wedding ceremony takes place.

Has Less Appetite.

The bulletin issued last night by the physicians in attendance on the czar says: "His majesty slept five hours intermittently. He rose this morning as usual. His appetite has lessened. His strength has not increased."

The Standard's St. Petersburg correspondent telegraphs the following: Everybody is surprised that no mention is made of the pulse or temperature; in short, there is no clew as to what the disease from which the czar is suffering actually is. Medical men are unable to form any conjectures as to the possible issue. It is rumored that an operation is contemplated. Another story has it that the malady is expected to reach a crisis within the next day or two, but as to what the operation or malady are, even the best informed are ignorant.

The St. Petersburg correspondent of The Daily News says that private telegrams received Monday from Livadia confirm the official dispatches. They stated that the czar's mental faculties are somewhat more active, and that he seems to have gained confidence by his short walk in the castle garden.

The weather at Livadia is beautiful. All agree that much importance must not be attached to his majesty's temporary betterment. The doctors keep their patient out of bed as much as possible, first to maintain his moral energy and second on account of the weakness of his heart, which with long reclining becomes very dangerous.

Struck For the Old Scale.

NORTH ADAMS, Mass., Oct. 23.—The help in the Briggsville mill refused President Barker's offer of a restoration of 8 per cent and two hours and began a strike yesterday. The indications are that a compromise will be effected and that the help will return. About 200 hands are employed in the mill.

FOR GOOD CITIZENSHIP.

Lyceum League's Purpose Is to Train Young Men For Pure Politics.

BOSTON, Oct. 23.—The management of the Lyceum League of America was transferred last night from The Youth's Companion company to a directorate, of which Hon. Theodore Roosevelt is president. The Lyceum league is a national organization of young men who are training themselves for the duties of citizenship.

It is in some respects like an old-fashioned debating society, except that its discussions are confined to American political, economic and social questions, and much attention is given to local government reform. Its lyceums are scattered through all the states. It is non-partisan. In his inaugural address, President Roosevelt said:

"The prime purpose of the league is to cultivate good citizenship. In political life, whether a man acts without or within party lines, is not of very great moment, if only he acts honestly, fearlessly and effectively. Parties are necessary. But no man has a right to condone crime or to excuse moral shortcomings of any kind because of alleged party necessity. With the young American it rests to decide the failure or success of the tremendous experiment begun by Washington and carried on by Lincoln."

Advance Was Refused.

NEWBURYPORT, Mass., Oct. 23.—Yesterday the 100 cutters for the extensive shoe contractor, E. P. Dodge, notified the firm that they would strike if by 4 p. m. their new price-list, the minimum of which was $15 a week per man, was not acceded to. The firm declined, and the cutters quit work. This will cause a closing of the shops, depriving at least 500 persons of employment.

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., Oct. 23.—Another strike was begun at the Wamsutta mills yesterday. The wide loom weavers in No. 7 mill, about 50 in number, were requested to take another loom, making five looms for each weaver. The request was not complied with, the weavers leaving the mill in a body rather than take the extra work.

ROME, Oct. 23.—Mgr. Boeglin, editor and proprietor of The Moniteur de Rome, was arrested last night and will be expelled from the country. The Moniteur de Rome has stopped publication. A Grand Trunk Shakeup.

PORTLAND, Me., Oct. 23.—For some months detectives employed by the directors of the Grand Trunk railroad have been engaged in spotting dishonest train employes, and the result has been radical changes of conductors all along the line of the road. Many conductors who have been considered trusty men have been discharged, and many more removals are to follow. Employes are very much stirred up over the affair.

SALVATIONISTS' METHODS.

General Booth Declares That the End Justified the Means.

NEW YORK, Oct. 23.—The members of the Salvation Army gathered in Union square last evening, and after greeting the venerable General Booth, dispersed to reassemble in Carnegie Music hall, where an audience of 5000 greeted General Booth. The boxes were filled with fashionable men and women.

In the midst of a picturesque group on the stage the general was the striking and central figure. He was surrounded by his staff officers, the bands, and slum brigade. The background of this group was composed of the banners of the army, bearing such inscriptions as "Harlem for Jesus" and "The Bowery for our Lord."

Commander Booth led in prayer, and then the Rev. Dr. Bradford read an address of welcome to General Booth. The address was signed by Rev. Dr. Parkhurst, M. K. Jessup, W. E. Dodge, Dr. Hastings, D. J. Burrell, A. J. Palmer and others. As Dr. Parkhurst's name was mentioned, there was a round of applause.

Commander Booth then presented his father, the general, with a handsomely framed testimonial from the staff officers. General Booth made a speech, in which he briefly told the history of the army.

"Why did I undertake this work?" he asked. "Because in one part of the east end of London the population had never been inside a church. I drew the painted women from the street and the drunkards around me and preached the gospel of Jesus to them. Before them Christianity was a byword of reproach on their lips.

"People have questioned our mode of operations—the noise and banners—but I claim the end has justified the means. We have planted our banner on the walls of St. Petersburg and in distant India, and will push our fight to every corner of the earth."

Disastrous Underground Fire.

DENVER, Oct. 23.—A fire, caused by spontaneous combustion, in a hill above the town of Marshal, 80 years ago, threatens to communicate to the surrounding coal fields. Two weeks ago the miners were driven by smoke from the drift of the last coal mine that was workable.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 23.—Captain Hudgins of the coffee bark, Dom Pedro II, gives a graphic description of a dynamite explosion that occurred in Rio a few days before his vessel sailed for Baltimore.

A Brazilian soldier discovered near the English cemetery a subterranean magazine in which the insurgents of the recent rebellion had concealed a quantity of gunpowder, cartridges and dynamite shells. The soldier reported his find to the general commander, and a cart was sent to the scene to remove the contents.

A detachment of soldiers and a curious crowd of citizens followed it to the little hill. A quantity of shells had been placed in a pile and others had been passed out close behind it, when one of the soldiers, while in the act of handling a shell, dropped it among the others.

The same second an explosion shook the earth. A sheet of flame shot upward and a cloud of whitish smoke came into view. The vessels in the harbor rocked at their moorings, and the city was much excited. The soldiers and mules were blown into fragments, and only the iron tires of the cart wheels were found. Over 60 persons were reported killed.

The president appears to be in the best of health. He says he is thoroughly rested and spent an enjoyable vacation.
